Survey Shows Big Gain in Building, Bank Totals

REPORT GAIN IN POSTAL RECEIPTS

Deposits Are $2,500,000 Greater Than in July of Last Year

There's no summer slump in Santa Ana!

Bank deposits, building permits, postal receipts, and recording fees all showed increases for the month of July over the corresponding month last year.

Building hit the greatest high, with this July's figures more than twice as high as those of July, 1935. Last month 47 permits were issued for a total of $83,608. In July of last year 55 permits were issued for a total of $34,603.

Bank Deposits

Building this year has already surpassed total yearly records for 1932, 1933 and 1934. To date 402 permits have been issued for construction totaling $537,620. Last month's totals were higher than for any month this year except May.

Over $2,000,000 more is on deposit in three Santa Ana banks today than was on deposit a year ago, a survey revealed. The First National bank reported total deposits of $10,157,976.02 at close of business yesterday, as compared with $8,559,015.36 a year ago. The Commercial National bank reported its deposits now were $1,342,183.75 as compared with $1,245,854.92. The Santa Ana branch of Bank of America was not able to release exact figures, but said deposits were roughly $1,000,000 more this year than last. Figures for the Santa Ana branch, Security First National bank of Los Angeles, are not yet available.

Postal Total Up

Postal receipts rose from $13,533.71 last year to $13,744.94 for July of this year. Postmaster Frank Harwood said receipts for August would show an even greater gain, because many orders for special-issue stamps were held over and would be filled this month. Gains have been registered every month this year except May, he said. In May, 1935, the dime chain letter craze boosted receipts all over the country.

Documents Filed in the County

Records office for last month totaled 4841. Recorder Fred Sidelbottom said today, as against 4302 for July of last year. This year's collections came to $3275.35.

His Office Netted $7083.79 for the county treasury in the fiscal year just closed. Fee collections were $41,215.68 and expenditures were $34,131.89.

COUNTY BANS ITS RESERVE

This year's county budget means what it says. Departments must stay within their budgets. Unexpected expenditures and requests for funds will be frowned upon.

These were conclusions reached today when the summary of the proposed county budget revealed that there will be no unbudgeted reserve as in previous years. Last year this fund was set up for $551,262.

Damage Not Heavy

A number of Florida communities found the damage relatively light in view of the hurricane's force. Road damage was estimated at $10,000 to $15,000. Some frame dwellings were leveled. Power and communications lines were carried away, hundreds of trees were uprooted in Florida and Alabama, and crops were damaged.

Schooner Ashore

The Mobile, Ala., coast guard said a communications truck radioed that the schooner Blue Hull was ashore seven miles east of Destin, Fla.

Planes from St. Petersburg, Fla., and Biloxie, Miss., aided the cutter Tampa and three patrol boats in a hunt for the missing schooner Ketchikan.

Coast guardsmen searched still tumbling gulf waters for the fishing schooner Sea Gull, unreported since she left Tampa July 25 for the Dry Tortugas. The Sea Gull also had five aboard.

YOUTH HELPS GIRL MURDER HER MOTHER

Holds Woman's Arms As Daughter Strikes With Hatchet

BAYONNE, N. J. (AP)—Police Chief Cornelius J. O'Neill announced today that Gladys MacKnight, 17, confessed she killed her mother with a hatchet while her sweetheart held the mother's arms.

Smiling affectionately at each other during the arraignment, Gladys and her young sweetheart, Donald Wightman, 18, were formally charged with murder today for the slaying.

Girl Giggles

So unconcerned that she giggled light heartedly in an ante room before she was led into court, the girl stood close to Wightman as Police Recorder Raymond J. Cuddy ordered both held without bail for the action of the grand jury after they had waived any pleas.

Police Chief O'Neill meanwhile disclosed details of the joint confession, which he said both had signed, setting forth how the girl, a recent high school graduate, killed her mother with a hatchet while Wightman, chorister on a radio religious hour, pinioned the woman's arms.

Quarrel Over Supper

The girl had quarreled with her mother, Mrs. Helen MacKnight, 47, chairman of the literary club of the Bayonne Women's club and wife of an executive of a cable company, because the mother had not prepared supper early enough for her to keep a tennis date, the girl said.

Wightman confessed the slaying when he and the girl were arrested in flight.

The girl told him, O'Neill said, that she asked her mother to prepare an early dinner last night because she had an appointment to play tennis with Wightman.

Mother Grabs Knife

"Get it ready yourself if you want it early," the mother was quoted as replying.

This led to a bitter quarrel between the two, O'Neill said the girl stated, and the mother brandished a butcher knife at the girl.

Wightman seized the mother by the arms and the girl grabbed the hatchet from the top of an icebox and struck her mother on the head "once or twice."

As the mother fell moaning, Wightman said, "hit her again," O'Neill quoted the girl as saying.

EX-BALL STAR NEAR DEATH

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP)—Grover Cleveland Alexander, the former National League pitching star, is in a critical condition in a hospital here with injuries believed by police to have been inflicted by a hit and run motorist.

He was found unconscious at a street intersection early this morning. Hospital physicians said he has a deep cut on the head and expressed fear of a skull fracture.

Alexander was in the National League a score of years with the Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis clubs.

Police 'Raid' Nets Truck Load Of Road Signs

So many illegal advertising signs were placed along Santa Ana boulevard that police yesterday had to call a truck to haul them away.

City Attorney L. W. Blodgett called the police station and explained that a vegetable stand and numerous signs were erected in violation of city ordinance. Officers warned the operator of the stand, then started in on the signs.

When they got through, the pile was so large they obtained a city truck and had them hauled to the city yard for storage.

Word from Rabat, French Morocco, said six of the 11 fliers forced down by bad weather in French Morocco had appealed to the Italian consul to help obtain their release.

The head of their aerial caravan, widely reported to be transporting arms and ammunition for Gen. Francisco Franco's rebels, was quoted as admitting he led an expedition financed by a private Italian concern to deliver supplies to the Fascist.

The French government initiated an investigation to determine the nature of the expedition.

At the war front, troops from Madrid and Barcelona established contact for renewed assaults on Zaragoza in an effort to open up communications in the rebel area of northern Spain.

Spanish Royal Family Join Rebels

Spanish royal family at Cannes, France, said Prince Carlos, brother-in-law of the Prince of the Asturias, probably would join the Spanish insurgents.

MANCHESTER, Ky. (AP)—Yancey Thacker, 50, magistrate of district No. 4, was shot and killed while standing on his porch at his home in the Pottersburg section near the Laurel county line today.

That section was the scene of the burning of from six to 10 residences and barns within the past six weeks.

Sheriff J. E. White with a posse and bloodhounds went in pursuit of the slayer.

LOYAL FORCE MARCHES ON ZARAGOZA

Italian Fliers, Nabbed In French Morocco, Appeal for Help

(By The Associated Press)

Two columns of fresh leftist troops intent on crushing the rebel stronghold of Zaragoza in north-eastern Spain apparently executed an encircling movement on that city today as Madrid dug in for fascist assaults.

As insurrectionist troops and loyalists sparred for an opening which would turn the tide of civil war, a spokesman for Italian fliers seized in French Morocco as they were en route to Africa, rebel headquarters said they were emissaries from a private Italian company.

AIMEE, AIDE NEAR SPLIT

LOS ANGELES. (AP)—Aimee Semple McPherson returned today from a church convention in Portland, Ore., and admitted for the first time publicly that there is a "serious difference of opinion" between her and Rhea Crawford, her associate pastor.

Referring to her co-worker at Angelus Temple by her married name, Mrs. McPherson said "if Mrs. Spilvalo is unhappy in her work, in the interest of Temple harmony I am quite willing and eager to give my consent for her to void her Temple contract."

Commenting on depositions filed in connection with Miss Vivian Denton's $500,000 slander suit against her, Mrs. McPherson said the $30,710.41 she was reputed to have received last year in gifts and salaries she "put right back into my religious work."

EXTORTIONIST IN NEBRASKA CONFESSES

Youth Sent Letter to Child Star's Father Demanding $25,000

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (AP)—Sterling W. Powell, 16-year-old farm boy charged with attempting to extort $25,000 from the father of Shirley Temple, child actress, today pleaded guilty and waived preliminary hearing when he was arraigned before U. S. Commissioner A. F. Streitz here.

Streitz set bond for the youth at $1000 and bound him over to the federal district court at the next term here, which starts June 8, 1937. Sheriff Howard Bechtel of Perkins county signed bond for Powell and the boy left immediately for his home at Grant with his parents and Bechtel. The bond set the appearance date for June 8, 1937.

Mailed May 10

Powell told department of justice agents he mailed the letter to George Temple, father of the child actress, last May 10 at his home in Grant, Neb. The letter threatened the life of the child but no money was paid to the youth.

The letter said in part:

"Unless $25,000 is dropped from an airplane near Grant, Neb., on May 15, the life of Shirley Temple will be endangered."

The missive was mailed May 9 but it was not opened until May 18—three days after the specified deadline—in the fan mail department of the Twentieth Century-Fox studios in Hollywood.

Paper Traced

Government operatives were notified at once. At Washington, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the justice department's bureau of investigation, related how the square of paper was subjected to scientific tests and traced through the manufacturer to stores at Grant and Madrid, Neb. Further undisclosed deductions led to the seizure of Powell.

The sheriff said the youth attended the movies regularly, was regarded as a good student in high school and was a member of a family that was highly respected and in comfortable financial circumstances.

Shirley Temple, oblivious of it all, played checkers last night at a Eureka, Calif., hotel where she was enjoying a vacation with her parents.

Mr. Temple said the child star had not been informed of the affair and that the elder Temples did not regard it seriously.

A Romance Long Ago

It happened long ago, the meeting of Boaz and Ruth, in that barley field among the gleaners. And the scribes of ancient Israel recorded it in their sacred archives. Then centuries later, Merian, the great engraver of 1625, read the story in the Bible. He illustrated, as only he could, and today you may see a copy of the original drawing on page 9 of The Journal. The Journal's church page, most complete and interesting in Orange county, is a non-commercial service for the churches and appears every Saturday.

SAVINGS AND INCOME AID TAXPAYER

Total Bill To Be Less Than In 1935 By Sum of $217,059

For every dollar the Orange county taxpayer contributed for general county purposes last year, this year he will pay only 83 cents, a study of the preliminary budget indicated today. This is because although the county proposes to spend $12,519 more than budgeted last year, it will be $217,059 less in taxes.

Savings carried over from the fiscal year just closed, and increased anticipated revenues from sources other than taxes account for the lowered taxes. On the basis of the proposed budget, county officials expect a tax rate of 62 cents inside cities and 64 cents outside as compared with 69 cents and 73 cents last year.

Tax Total Lower
Amounts to be raised by taxation for all services including the county's special districts, also are lower by $244,800 than last year, a summary today revealed.

Figures tabulated by County Auditor W. T. Lambert today after the board of supervisors in a midnight session Wednesday made final changes in the proposed budget, show that the county plans to spend $2,064,300 this year as compared with $2,051,781 last.

At the same time the amount to be raised by direct tax is estimated at $1,057,585 as compared with $1,274,644 last year. These figures cover the county general, salary, health, hospital, welfare, interest and sinking, advertising, good roads, bridge and park funds.

No Salary Increases
The salary fund, it was revealed, is $4887 less than that of last year. No salary increases were allowed by the board. Members of the County Employees' association circulated petitions asking that their pay cuts of two years ago be restored, but did not present them to the board of supervisors.

County welfare is budgeted for twice last year's figure, asking a total of $657,351 as compared with $338,095 last year.

For Special Districts
Including special districts such as harbor, and flood control, and special funds such as motor vehicle, received from the state, and several storm drain construction accounts, the amount proposed to be spent through the board of supervisors is $2,057,805, as compared with $2,025,761 last year.

Following are budgets by funds, followed by the amount to be raised by taxation for each of the funds: general, $569,785; health, $229,348; hospital, $229,348; welfare, $657,351; $240,044; interest and sinking, $86,500; $54,122; advertising, $14,475; $8,401; county good roads, $89,358; none by tax; bridge, $56, none by tax; county park, $23,410; $15,909. Total, $2,064,300, $1,507,585.

Anticipated Rates
Anticipated tax rates by funds, making up the estimated total of 62 cents, are as follows, expressed in dollars: county general, .17; salary, .132; health, .025; hospital, .103; welfare, .135; interest and sinking, .04; county good roads, .005; park, .01.

Budgeted for special county districts and funds are: motor vehicle fuel, $350,503; motor vehicle license, $86,100; motor vehicle franchise, $9,165; county library, $35,786; law library, $3,518; Orange county harbor district improvement fund, $8220; harbor district interest and sinking fund, $44,920; flood control district, $240,451; county flood bond loan, $23,478; construction account for West Anaheim storm drain, $58,804; construction account for La Veta storm drain, $32,068; total, $853,014. Of this latter total, $251,711 is to be raised by taxes.

SOVIETS SAY WAR NEAR

MOSCOW. (AP)—The existence of a German-Japanese military alliance or progress in that direction as a challenge to the Soviet Union and world peace was discussed openly in the press today on the anniversary of the declaration of a state of war with Germany.

Designating Germany, Japan and Italy, together with Poland, as enemies of peace, the newspapers asserted, "War is very near."

Preparations for war "never have been so open, rapid and provoking," said the Soviet press. "Italy, Germany and Japan have turned against England which in an unworthy confusion complicates the whole foreign policy of this traditionally cool, conservative nation."

Izvestia, government organ, declaring, "Japanese imperialism is now arranging a military alliance with Fascist Germany and is seeking alliances with Poland and Finland."

"The Japanese menace is directed not only against the Soviet Union and the Mongolian republic, but also against central and south China, the Philippine islands and Indonesia (Sumatra, Java and Bali)."

Karl Radek, who often reflects government opinion, said in Izvestia that the only question was when war would break out.

Sues Resort for Injuries in Fall

Blaming the La Vida Mineral Springs company for a fall at the resort Aug. 11, 1935, Mrs. Luella Sellars today asked $25,000 in a damage action filed in Superior court here. Her husband, E. A. Sellars, asked $1000 for loss of her company.

Mrs. Sellars' complaint asserts that as she was on her way to take a hot mineral bath, she caught her foot underneath a timber used as an automobile stop, and fell, suffering concussion of the brain, impairing her eyesight for close work. William E. Stanley, Whittier attorney, prepared the complaint.

PARALYSIS IS ON DECLINE
With no new cases of infantile paralysis reported in Orange county within the past two weeks, and all Boy Scouts who attended Camp Rokili released from quarantine Tuesday, the local Girl Scout council today proceeded with tentative plans for a girls' camp at Rokili, beginning Aug. 20.

"If there are no further developments of the disease within the next few weeks, probably it will be all right to hold the camp," Dr. K. H. Sutherland, county health officer, stated.

Incipient Cases
"Should new cases of infantile paralysis develop, however, I would recommend that camp plans and those for prolonged gatherings of large groups of young people be abandoned."

"The danger would lie in spread of the disease from undischarged, incipient cases in such a group, kept closely together for several days."

"There is no danger in the camp site itself," Dr. Sutherland said. "I have no authority to place a ban on the camp, which is not in this county, but I think any such gathering would be unwise if local cases continue to develop."

Approximately 127 Boy Scouts returned Tuesday from Rokili, where they were placed under quarantine after Allen Cook, 11, became ill and was removed from camp, later dying of infantile paralysis.

Several boys who were brought from camp by their parents were placed under quarantine as soon as they arrived in Orange county. They also were released Tuesday.

Developments Recalled
Following his examination of the Cook lad at the Santa Ana home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Cook, Dr. Sutherland placed calls for Dr. Godfrey, San Bernardino county health officer, and for Harrison White, camp executive. Neither Godfrey nor White could be reached until the following day.

In the meantime, an employee of the Orange county hospital, where young Cook had been taken, notified several friends, Dr. Sutherland said. He said he did not know of this development until after it took place.

These people drove to Rokili that night, removing six boys to their homes in this county. When informed of the move, Dr. Sutherland promptly placed them under quarantine and subsequently quarantined several others released from camp by San Bernardino authorities.

RIOT CHARGE IS DROPPED

Seven Mexicans arrested July 6 in an outburst of bloody warfare between strikers and citrus pickers appeared in Superior Judge James L. Allen's court Friday to face three separate criminal charges.

Gregorio Delgado, the only one of 116 charged with participating in a riot at the Charles Wagner ranch who was not released Wednesday when Judge Homer G. Ames granted a writ of habeas corpus, was charged with assault with a deadly weapon in an information on file in court this morning. The charge of rioting was dropped. He is to be arraigned on the new charge next Friday.

Five accused of rioting at the Gackstetter ranch, Orange, on July 5, Friday pleaded not guilty and were ordered to stand trial Aug. 6. Clarence Rust, attorney for the Mexican labor union, who is defending all but one of a group of 13 now on trial on riot charges, appeared on behalf of the five. These are Esquivel Poblano, Roberto Felix, Esteban Rodriguez, Leonardo Longorio and Aurelio Ruiz.

Rust also appeared for Severo Ornelas, who pleaded not guilty to an assault on M. A. Patterson on the latter's ranch on July 6. Ornelas' trial was set for Aug. 27 in Judge H. G. Ames' court.

McTighe Freed, Faces New Charge
John J. McTighe, Santa Ana, was freed of fictitious check charges yesterday afternoon when Superior Judge H. G. Ames dismissed the charge on motion of Deputy District Attorney Clarence Sprague.

McTighe had pleaded not guilty and was scheduled to go on trial before a jury in Judge Ames' court Monday.

But McTighe must face trial in Lynwood on petty theft charges. Lynwood police had him rebooked on the second charge at the county jail here yesterday.

DeBord was arrested the next afternoon in Huntington Beach, where he stopped to inquire about the crime from a police officer. Vance was traced to Oregon, where he was captured several days later.

RUM WITNESS THREATENED
LOS ANGELES. (AP)—Reports that prospective witnesses before the county grand jury investigating liquor control affairs have been threatened were under investigation today.

George Stahlman and U. U. Black, deputy district attorneys who have been presenting evidence before the jury, informed George Warren, foreman of the body, that witnesses under subpoena have been threatened with harm if they testified.

The jury was in recess today until next Wednesday after indicting two persons, one of them Jesse Crain, political figure. The other indicted on the same charges was Joseph Wise, a salesman for a Los Angeles brewery. A warrant was issued for his arrest.

Third Explosion Victim Succumbs
SAN DIEGO. (AP)—Robert W. Opie, 24, seaman first class, died at dawn today in the naval hospital here, the third victim of Tuesday's gun explosion aboard the cruiser Marblehead.

Communist Is Kept Off Ballot
FRESNO. (AP)—A court order today temporarily enjoined County Clerk Ernest Dusenberry from placing the name of a Communist party candidate on the August primary election ballots.

The injunction, issued in superior court, came in a suit which Charles Gilmore, Sacramento attorney, said was intended to outlaw all Communist candidates in California.

PRISON GATES CLOSE UPON KIDNAPERS

The big steel gates of San Quentin state prison banged behind Gerald Vance and Fulton DeBord this afternoon. The prison is scheduled never to release them until the two are dead.

The 19-year-old Ontario youths, sentenced to life imprisonment under California's "Lindbergh law" for kidnaping, have no possibility of parole. They must spend their lives behind San Quentin's stone walls for the kidnaping and shooting June 16 of Harold Marshall, 24-year-old Laguna Beach taxi driver.

Say Farewell
They were led out of their cells in the county jail here this morning, glum-faced as always, after a final parting scene with their parents. Deputy Sheriff Fred Humiston and Don Dunbar, bundled them into an automobile and set out for the long drive to the penitentiary. They were scheduled to arrive this afternoon.

Vance's mother and father, quiet, caribbean-looking people, visited with the condemned youth briefly last night at the jail.

Mrs. DeBord, widowed mother of the other prisoner, saw her son Thursday for the last time before he is fitted with the grey prison uniform and locked in a cell block in the world's largest penitentiary.

Victim In Hospital
The parents looked sad but resigned as they said goodbye to their sons, who pleaded guilty to the kidnaping charges. The boys escaped the gallows, the only other alternative after conviction of kidnaping, when the victim is injured. Superior Judge H. G. Ames decided on life sentences.

Marshall, handsome, quiet youth who drove a taxicab part time in Laguna Beach and owned a half interest in a parking lot there, lies paralyzed from the waist down in St. Joseph's hospital, appearing weaker than he did a month ago. His eyes are deeper, his hands thinner and his voice less distinct after his long siege of half-life on a hospital bed.

Emergency Operation
A bullet from a .32-caliber revolver admittedly in the hands of Vance crashed through his chest and lodged in his spine when he was shot by a taxi driver, who had first slugged him over the head with the gun butt. The slug tore through his chest, inflicting a wound which has only recently healed, and blinded him as it shattered the spinal column. He later recovered his sight.

Only an emergency operation by a famous Los Angeles specialist saved Marshall's life, as bits of shattered bone were replaced in an effort to restore the broken nerve centers.

Since that night, Marshall has been unable to bend his back. The two prisoners faced him twice in the hospital—once at a preliminary hearing, and once after he had pleaded guilty and were about to be sentenced.

Crime Recalled
Marshall was kidnaped at 8:30 p. m. the night of June 16, when Vance hired his taxi at Laguna Beach, ostensibly for a trip up Laguna canyon to look for a house. Becoming suspicious after they had gone three miles up the road, Marshall turned and was slugged with the butt of a pistol. Reaching out the seat to grapple with his attacker, Marshall was shot through the chest, and slumped to the floor of the car. Then, according to testimony of Marshall, DeBord appeared from a parked car, carrying a piece of rope, and suggested that the victim with his attacker, Marshall, be shot through the chest, and slumped to the floor of the car. Then, according to testimony of Marshall, DeBord appeared from a parked car, carrying a piece of rope, and suggested that the victim with his attacker, Marshall, be shot through the chest, and slumped to the floor of the car. Then, according to testimony of Marshall, DeBord appeared from a parked car, carrying a piece of rope, and suggested that the victim with his attacker, Marshall, be shot through the chest, and slumped to the floor of the car.

Pleading with them for his life, Marshall was finally taken back to the beach city in his cab and dumped out in a parking lot behind a sandwich stand, where his groans attracted aid.

DeBord was arrested the next afternoon in Huntington Beach, where he stopped to inquire about the crime from a police officer. Vance was traced to Oregon, where he was captured several days later.

Three are Shot
Guard H. H. Corey fired into the crowd. Three men slumped to the ground screaming. The convicts hesitated, shouting threats and hurling advice to leaders. The guards stood silent. Word was sent to Warden Lewis that the men would not return to their cells.

As the prisoners apparently were preparing for another rush, state policemen appeared on the walls, with tear-gas bombs ready to throw.

Bedlam In Cells
The convicts quieted and a moment later marched back to their cells. Then bedlam broke loose. Prisoners screamed and shouted imprecations. They hurled clubs and knives through windows and between the bars at whoever appeared in the cell block. The weapons were taken from the butcher shop and commissary.

State police and prison officials spent most of the night going from cell to cell collecting the paraphernalia.

Murderer Dies
Thomas Baughn, 50, murderer, died an hour after the riot. James Hamilton, 36, another killer, was shot through the lung. Joseph Duprey, 24, burglar, was shot in the hand.

The riot was the first major outbreak at the Oregon prison since 1926 when one man was killed and 14 hurt. The penitentiary houses about 1000 convicts.

GIRL SETTLES TRACTOR AND CRASH SUIT

A $10,535 damage suit, precipitated by allegedly unwelcome advances of a Tustin youth to his girl companion, was settled in superior court yesterday by payment of $250. Lorraine Seavey, 17, compromised claims growing out of an automobile accident which she claimed resulted after Glen Vernon Keiser, 17, made the unwelcome advances while driving.

Her mother, Mrs. Effie Seavey, and attorney, Martell E. Thompson, agreed to the compromise before Judge H. G. Ames, who gave it his approval.

Miss Seavey had brought suit on grounds that Aug. 11, 1935, young Seavey made unwelcome advances while driving with her as a passenger on North Drive, Newport Beach, and in so doing crashed into a parked car.

For her injuries, which included five loose teeth and a split lip, she asked $5,325 from young Keiser and $5000 from his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Burley V. Keiser. Forgy, Rienhaus and Forgy, Santa Ana law firm, represented the defendants.

FISHERMAN JAILED
Manuel S. Silva, 22, Newport fisherman, was brought to the county jail last night to serve a five-day sentence on speeding charges.

MORE ABOUT PRISON BREAK
barring releases from prison at the expiration of minimum sentences except after formal action of the parole board and governor.

Word of the ruling reached the convicts yesterday. Two of them went to the commissary and ordered the cooks to stop work. Several score others began piling food in the yard where 600 more were milling around during a rest period. The leaders began yelling and the cry gained volume.

Frank Tilson, a two-time loser, serving a five-year term for burglary and assault on an officer, shouted:

"Come on guys—let's make a break for it."

A sharp command to halt was ignored.

One guard fired into the air as the frenzied crowd moved toward the walls. Then some of the prisoners passed the deadline 30 feet inside the barricade.

WORKERS ON WPA GIVEN INCREASE

Wages of all Orange county WPA workers except administrative officials were boosted 10 per cent today under an order secured by Dan Mulherron, county WPA manager, two weeks ago when he conferred with Frank Y. McLaughlin, state director.

The increase means about $14,300 per month on the basis of a monthly payroll of $143,000 previous to the increase. Workers whose payroll periods started today immediately take the new rate. All groups will be on the higher pay scale by Aug. 10, Mulherron said.

Unskilled workers who previously were paid $48 per month will receive $52.50 under the revised scale. Mulherron went north to ask McLaughlin to raise the rate to $55 as paid in Los Angeles and San Diego counties, but found that federal rules did not allow that much increase, but that the state director could grant an increase of 10 per cent.

Other rates were increased as follows: semi-skilled, $55 to $60.50; skilled, $70 to $77, and professional and technical, $77 to $84.70.

Judge Returns; 'Some Fishing'

Justice of the Peace Kenneth E. Morrison was back on the job here today, following three weeks vacation spent visiting relatives near Kent, Wash.

"Some fishing!" exclaimed the judge as he returned with his family from the vacation and relieved Justice Chris P. Pann of Huntington Beach who has been substituting for him in Santa Ana justice court.

Police Baffled As 'Flood' in Store Vanishes
"Danger. This building being flooded." That sign on a vacant Main street store yesterday got Watchman Bert Dawson to wondering. He opened the door and shut it quickly.

Calling police, he reported the room was filled with gas. Police called the fire department, which reported the building was locked. Then police got it open, looked around, found neither flood nor gas, then went back to the station. They're still wondering what it's all about.

G. O. P. CHIEF TO STOP IN COUNTY

Howard Irwin to Confer With Hamilton During Visit Here

Howard Irwin of Fullerton, chairman of the Orange county Republican central committee, will confer Aug. 14 or 15 with John D. Hamilton, chairman of the Republican national committee. At the same time he will invite Hamilton to visit Orange county, both during his August trip and during a later visit to California.

Hamilton, head of the campaign to elect Landon and Knox, will be in the Southland Aug. 14 and 15. He will confer with chairmen of county committees and with state leaders, imparting his plans for the campaign and getting their ideas, Irwin said today.

On his first visit he is expected to go to the San Diego exposition, and it is hoped that he can be persuaded to stop in Orange county for a short time, Irwin said. He will return to California later for a longer visit, when he probably will be in Orange county again.

Mrs. Edith Van De Water, Republican national committee woman for California, has appointed Edward S. Shattuck as general chairman of the committee on arrangements to receive Hamilton.

While in Southern California he proposes to spend a day with his mother and Hale Hamilton, his brother, who reside at Santa Monica.

THORN
FLESH

By GLENN L. THORNE

Well, folks, one more day and I can go home and back to work—which means a real vacation for another year as compared to this. Funny how we can't remember, from year to another, to stay home on our vacation!

You'd never recognize Thorne in the flesh now.

He's an Indian—a red man.

Cooked, blistered—and how!

But to be serious—couldn't we do our official "what are so interested in their fellow citizens before elections" "waste" some of our money on beach frontage for those who cannot afford a "private property—keep off"?

Such political "fodder" ought to make good ammunition during a summer election.

In some cases, it has been boarded up so as to even shut off the view of the wild woods. Why don't our officials (who are so interested in their fellow citizens before elections) "waste" some of our money on beach frontage for those who cannot afford a "private property—keep off"?

LANDON CANVASSES CONGRESS SEATS
TOLPENKA, Kan.—Rep. Chester C. Bolton (R., Ohio) visited Gov. Alf M. Landon yesterday and announced the eligibility of the 350,000 CCC enrollees to register and vote in the 1936 elections in states where they are stationed was a matter for the several states to determine. Recent conflicting opinions by the attorney generals of Arizona and Nevada raised the question of the status of the enrollees. ECW's only gesture, it was said, will be to allow each of those of voting age a three day leave of absence—one with pay—to go home to vote.

Here and There With The Journal's
Rambling County Editor
By I. N. (BRICK) GAINES

THIS is one last appeal to everyone to go down to Laguna Beach either this evening or tomorrow evening. There's a big thrill waiting there for anyone who goes, and it's worth a dozen trips down there and back.

The living pictures, shown nightly at the Festival of Arts, are actually wonderful. They send cold shivers up and down one's back. Really, they do, and no fooling. It's hard to imagine the hard work that must have gone into preparing those pictures for presentation to the large crowds each evening. Really fine backgrounds for each one, and unbelievable coloring in actors and costumes.

If folks only knew the beauty awaiting them in the pictures, El Paso would be visited by every resident in the county! You can see that I'm sort of enthusiastic about the art festival. I am. It's a real tribute to the artists and other hard working residents of Laguna Beach. They've implanted a lasting tribute to the minds of thousands of visitors in the past few days.

Congratulations, Laguna!

Seal Beachers have been congratulating Judge John C. Ord all this week.

Because the judge has breezed by another milestone, without even slowing down.

This time Judge Ord chucked up 94—he's seen that many years roll by, and he's still going strong.

One of the oldest living members of the Masonic order, the judge served in the civil war, enlisting in Vermont. In 1866 he came to California, and after traveling around a bit, he settled at Los Alamitos, where he was the first postmaster and justice of the peace.

Then in 1892 he moved his building to Seal Beach—using a 30-mule team. The structure still stands there, Main and Electric streets. Since that time the judge has been busy making friends in Seal Beach. And don't think he hasn't lots of 'em!

On his birthday, which was Tuesday, he was literally showered with his favorite cigars. Just wait until he hits 100!

Game Warden E. C. Jackson, who circulates around the county and sees if you're shooting deer when you shouldn't—having too much fawn, as Bob Guild's pal would say—or violating other fish and game laws, says that the license situation isn't as bad as it seems.

There are a few convictions, of course, when folks are caught without their $2 license, when they're fishing in the ocean. Or rather, when they're catching fish. But almost everyone has his license anyway, the game warden claims.

The other day he boarded a big live bait boat. There were 50 anglers aboard. And only three were without their little tin badges. The trio suffered.

On another day, Jackson saw a number of surf fishermen at one spot near Newport. He sat around and waited for awhile, until they all started catching fish. Then he investigated the crowd. They all had licenses.

Most everyone who's interested in the sport buys one, anyway, the game warden said, because they go into the mountains at least once a year, anyway.

Judges have been big-hearted in assessing fines thus far, he continued, with the minimum of $10 assessed, and usually $5 of that suspended. But to get that cut rate, the guilty party must purchase his license, which runs the cost up to $7. Which is lots more than two bucks. It pays, he added, to buy the license first.

At last, things are stirring again in the mayors' horseshoe pitching contest!

After several months of jockeying for positions, the survivors of the initial rounds have been lined up, to battle for doubtful honors and very solid statuary.

In the final rounds of the tournament, which Harry Welch started some time ago, Fred Schwendeman, Tustin city councilman, will meet Tom Talbert, city dad from Huntington Beach; Supervisor N. E. West, Laguna Beach, will tangle with E. M. Chapman of Orange; Mayor Charlie Young, who leads the destinies of Placentia, is facing a hard fighter in Mayor Fred Rowland, Santa Ana; the last pair to battle on the courts will be Irvin George Gordon, Newport councilman and Joseph P. Smith, Santa Ana city father.

Aug. 8 has been set as a tentative date for the playoffs. And League of Municipalities members will be informed of the winners at their next meeting.

My choice still remains Tom Talbert, shoe-tosser from Huntington Beach. Tom struggled through the early rounds of the tournament, surviving through judicious use of horseshoe plug eating tobacco. And reports filter in that he's training for the next battle already.

But what happened to Mayor Elmer Hughes, from Seal Beach? At last reports, Elmer was in the running, and now he's not mentioned as a contestant. I'm going to demand an investigation!

BUILDING AT LAGUNA NEARS HALF-MILLION DOLLAR MARK

RESIDENCES TAKE LEAD IN TOTAL

Increase of $197,396 Is Reported Over Same Period Last Year

LAGUNA BEACH.—Building activity in the art colony continues to climb towards record-breaking totals, figures relating to the issuance of building permits of City Building Inspector Floyd W. Case today revealed. Yesterday afternoon, with possibility of additional permits being issued before the close of office hours, the grand total for the first seven months of the present year, Jan. 1 to July 31, stood at $481,080, or nearly a half million dollars.

This total for the first seven months shows an increase of $197,396 over the total for the corresponding period of 1935, reported at $283,685.

Permits for the month of July aggregated $35,900, as compared to $29,815 for the same month of 1935. Last year the total for the entire 12 months was $403,412, which aggregate is already topped this year by nearly $80,000, in a seven-month period.

City officials reported that nearly all new buildings are in new residences, either for permanent residents or visitors from inland cities. Dozens of new homes are nearing completion in Laguna Beach and the nearby areas of Emerald Bay, South Laguna and smaller coastline settlements, they said.

GARDEN GROVE.—Handling of the delinquent juveniles in Orange county was explained to the board of the Garden Grove Lions club at Wednesday's luncheon meeting, when guest speakers were Superior Court Judge Homer Ames and J. A. Cranston, chairman of the co-ordinating council for juveniles.

The principal talk was given by Mr. Cranston, who said the object of the council is to get children before they become juvenile problems. It was formed through working together of the various departments having to deal with children's problems and plans are now underway to organize the county high schools to cooperate.

Each juvenile case is handled in three ways, he said. First, they come before Judge Ames' court, where the case is gone into thoroughly, then they go before the co-ordinating council committee and are then placed in the juvenile home, where an attempt is made to give them a normal home training.

Judge Ames spoke on his activities as head of the juvenile court. Poverty, he said, is the basic cause in most juvenile cases. Juvenile problems have been greatly reduced during past three years, in his opinion.

All youngsters of the county have been invited to attend the celebration, which is featured by evening campfires and marshmallow roasts, as well as a parade, scheduled for this afternoon, and contests and stunts.

NEWPORT BEACH.—Hundreds of youngsters of the Newport Harbor district gathered around campfires on the beach here last night dressed in pirate garb and carrying cutlass and sword. A parade at 3 p. m., when costumes will be judged, will be featured and following the parade new members of the "White Pirates" band will be initiated and each will be presented with a certificate of membership.

She was a member of the Methodist church for many years. She had many friends in Orange county and loved to recall old times with them.

Monkey Dislikes Night Life; Attacks Owner

SUNSET BEACH.—One small monkey provided the high lights of entertainment for a crowd at the Sam Lewis night club in Sunset Beach Thursday night.

The monkey, newly acquired by "Bo" Tunstall, Huntington Beach man, was taken out by its new owner to see the sights. Frightened by noise of music and laughter the tiny animal jabbered and jabbered in vain at its new owner.

Finally in desperation the monkey fastened its teeth neatly on Tunstall's thumb. The string which held the monkey fell from his fingers and the animal scooted into the rafters pursued by patrons of the establishment.

Around and around the building the procession wended to the detriment of decorations. Finally the monkey found an opening in a skylight and disappeared. Today Tunstall was looking for his pet monkey, aided by a group of Sunset Beach residents.

WOMAN DRIVER SEEKS MATE

HUNTINGTON BEACH.—Even the back seat driving proclivities of Mrs. Clara V. Edsall of Navarro, Calif., if she has any, will probably be overlooked the next time she and her husband start for San Diego.

Mr. and Mrs. Edsall started on a trip to San Diego yesterday. Each drove a separate car. Mrs. Edsall was supposed to follow her husband, J. C. Edsall, but both reckoned without considering Los Angeles traffic. Their machines became separated.

At Huntington Beach Mrs. Edsall stopped to appeal to police for aid. She was "okay," she told police but her husband might not be. Mrs. Edsall carried the family pocketbook and she didn't remember whether or not hubby had enough gasoline to get to San Diego.

Huntington Beach officers promised to keep an eye out for Edsall and help him along if necessary, and Mrs. Edsall continued her journey.

'RHYTHM ON RANGE' NOW AT BROADWAY

TWO FAMOUS FILMS ARE REVIVED

Two of the famous pictures of the past have been revived and opened at the Fox West Coast theater today. The two pictures, on the same bill, are "The Big House" starring Wallace Beery, Robert Montgomery, Chester Morris and others, and "Dancing Lady" with Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone and Fred Astaire. A newsreel and a cartoon complete the program.

Miss Crawford, who starts out in "Dancing Lady" as a cheap burlesque chorine and ultimately ends up with her name in bright lights on Broadway, has a part which gives her every opportunity for dancing, singing and plenty of displays of emotional fireworks.

Gable has the role as the musical comedy director who at first considers pushing Miss Crawford aside as the biggest pest of all his chorines, but eventually is brought to realize that there is more to the girl than a striking figure and particularly adept dancing legs.

Many sequences of "The Big House" were so grim that the cast had to clown between scenes just to relieve the tension, according to Chester Morris, who plays the leading role in the production. "The Big House" is the tale of life inside the prison walls.

'SOPHIE LANG' FILM BOOKED

The notorious thief of hearts and jewels who made a deep impression on American film audiences when she first appeared on the screen two years ago, stages a comeback in "The Return of Sophie Lang," opening at the Fox Broadway theater next Thursday.

Title role in the fast moving story of the reappearance of an international diamond thief is played by Gertrude Michael, who created "Sophie" in the original picture, "The Notorious Sophie Lang."

The bill is augmented by a second feature, "Always Tomorrow," a Paramount Screen Short, "Hills of Old Wyoming," and a Fox newsreel.

"The Return of Sophie Lang" picks up the story where "The Notorious Sophie Lang" dropped it. Sophie, believed dead by the police of two continents, is disclosed as having been in hiding. Reformed, she is seeking to conceal her true identity.

She is in the employ of an elderly woman, Elizabeth Patterson, who is a collector of valuable gems. As the picture opens the pair are sailing to America, with Miss Patterson having in her possession a famous gem, the Krueger diamond.

On shipboard Miss Michael meets Sir Guy Standing, her former associate in jewel thefts. Sir Guy, himself intent on getting his hands on the Krueger diamond, assumes that Sophie is playing the same game, refusing to believe her protestations that she had reformed.

Meanwhile, on board ship, a romance has begun between Miss Michael and Ray Milland, cast as a foreign newspaper correspondent.

Sir Guy steals the diamond, then is faced with the need of getting it ashore in America. He slips it into Milland's pocket. The means by which Miss Michael regains the gem for her employer, clears herself of suspicion, and brings her romance to a happy conclusion, make the balance of the story.

"Satan Met a Lady," starring Bette Davis and Warren William, has been booked by Manager Lester J. Fountain for the Fox West Coast theater starting next Thursday.

Schroeder Trial To Be Sept. 15

Trial of Edwin Schroeder, 22, of Santa Ana, on a felony charge of drunken driving was set for Sept. 15 in Superior Judge G. K. Scovel's court when Schroeder pleaded not guilty yesterday before Judge James L. Allen.

The complaint charges Schroeder with causing injury Jack Hunt June 28 in an automobile accident attributed to drunken driving.

Bing Sings In 'Rhythm on Range'

Bing Crosby and Frances Farmer are shown in a scene from "Rhythm on Range" which opened at the Fox Broadway theater today and which will play here for five days.

Old Gable-Crawford Film Revived

One of the favorite films of the past is revived in "Dancing Lady" with Clark Gable and Joan Crawford, who appeared at the Fox West Coast theater today.

Powell and Arthur Co-Starred

William Powell and Jean Arthur are pictured above in a scene from "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," which opens Sunday at the State theater for an engagement of three days.

'EX-MRS. BRADFORD' COMES TO STATE ON SUNDAY

A smart romantic comedy that revolves around a murder mystery is offered theatergoers at the State theater Sunday, Monday and Tuesday in "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," starring William Powell and Jean Arthur.

The second feature on the bill is "Gentle Julia," featuring Jane Withers.

In "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford" Powell plays the role of an amateur sleuth who traps the murderer of a jockey, but before he does so he is suspected himself, and it is then that his former wife, played by Jean Arthur, comes to his aid. Their light comedy provides most of the entertainment in the picture.

Others prominently cast include James Gleason, Eric Blore, Robert Armstrong, Lila Lee, Grant Mitchell, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Ralph Morgan, Lucille Gleason, Frankie Darro and Frank Reicher.

"Gentle Julia" is taken from Booth Tarkington's story of the same name, and concerns the adventures of a small girl who plays cupid and makes a match between her cousin and a young man in a small town, at the same time uncovering her cousin's first suitor as a swindler.

BRIDGING RIO HONDO

Contract has been awarded to Oscar Oberg of Los Angeles for construction of a reinforced concrete girder bridge across the Rio Hondo two miles west of El Monte on the Garvey-Holt avenue route. Contract price is $117,876.10.

BAXTER-LOY BING CROSBY IS STAR OF NEW FILM

"To Mary—With Love," heralded by critics as one of the outstanding pictures of the year, featuring Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, has been booked by Manager Lester J. Fountain for the Fox Broadway theater for Sunday, August 9.

The film tells a dramatic story of the problems of modern marriage. It is set in New York. The time is visioned in the years of the past decade. Baxter and Miss Loy marry. The husband, inspired by high ideals and driving ambition, though subject to worldly temptations, aspires to business successes. His devotion to business affairs creates a domestic rift. Baxter seeks relaxation in the company of Miss Claire Trevor. Miss Loy finds solace in the gay life of the teeming twenties and the companionship of Ian Hunter, true friend of both. The death of their child, which it was hoped would cement the affection of husband and wife, widens the gap.

As Baxter concentrates on a money-making career he slips from the straight and narrow path, while Miss Loy, fearful and suspicious, contemplates divorce. The market crash temporarily brings the pair together again. But in renewing his climb up the ladder, Baxter repeats the action that previously made Miss Loy's life a continual torment. Another crash and Hunter, who has watched the marriage going on the rocks, intervenes to effect an understanding and reconciliations between Baxter and Miss Loy that promises happier days for all.

Warren Hymer and George E. Stone, together with James Burke, add thrills to the yarn by trailing Crosby and Miss Farmer across the continent with the idea of kidnapping the girl and demanding ransom from her wealthy father. Robert Holloway, Lucille Webster Gleason appears as Miss Farmer's rugged Arizona aunt.

"Love Begins at Twenty," is a breezy comedy drama. Patricia Ellis and Warren Hull are starred in the picture, which also includes other outstanding screen luminaries as Hugh Herbert, Hobart Cavanaugh and Clarence Wilson.

Herbert gives a characterization of the bedraggled hubby, while Dorothy Vaughn, as his better half, rings the bell.

PLEAD GUILTY

James Anderson and Dan Norland yesterday pleaded guilty to second degree attempted burglary charges before Superior Judge James L. Allen and applied for probation. A hearing was granted for Aug. 21.

"Treasure Chest" short will be shown on the program.

The story is that of the Barbary coast of 30 years ago, opening on New Year's eve, 1906, and continuing through one of the most disastrous dramas of the century, the San Francisco earthquake and fire.

Gable is the boss of one of the most popular resorts on the Barbary coast. Miss MacDonald is the small town girl who wanders into his dance hall, filled with ambition to become a great singer.

As an added attraction, "King of the Islands," a colored featurette with Winifred Shaw and Warren Hymer, a cartoon and a

Lawn Party for August Bride

As a pre-nuptial courtesy for Miss Gertrude Menges of Fullerton, who on August 15 is to become the bride of Allen McClure of the same town, Miss Marjorie Lindsay entertained this afternoon at a delightfully arranged shower and bridge tea in the East Seventeenth street home of her mother, Mrs. A. J. Lasby.

A pink and white color scheme was chosen for the flowers and for appointments on the small tables at which refreshments were served after the bridge games. The playing took place in the gardens of the home, tables being set out on the lawn beneath the shade trees and umbrellas, and here the pretty gifts for the bride-to-be's bathroom were presented to the honored guest.

At the conclusion of the bridge games, guests were invited into the house where a lovely tea table spread with a white cloth and centered with white and pink blossoms and white tapers created a bridal atmosphere in keeping with the occasion.

GUESTS ARRIVING
Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Girt are planning to entertain Mrs. Comb and her daughter, Miss Sylvia Comb, Los Angeles, at their home, 2210 Maple street, this week-end.

Kiwanians Ready for Picnic

An anticipated yearly event in Kiwanis circles is the annual picnic which this summer has been set for Wednesday, August 5, at Irvine park, with plans for a gala afternoon and evening.

Events are to start with a baseball game at 3:30 o'clock, followed by a big picnic out under the trees at 6:30.

The chef committee has arranged an appetizing menu for the meal, to which all Kiwanians and their families are invited; guests are to bring their own table silverware, everything else being furnished.

For the evening hours, R. C. Raddant, chairman of the entertainment committee, has planned a program of stunts for both adults and children in the dance hall, with a host of prizes in readiness for the winners. Dancing to recorded music will follow for those who wish to stay later in the evening.

AIRPLANES CARRY NEWS OF BETROTHAL

Carrying out an aviation motif appropriate to one of the chief interests of the honored guest and her betrothed, Mrs. Fred A. Triplett chose a unique way in which to announce the engagement of her daughter, Miss Winifred Triplett, to Floyd Wright at a party Thursday evening in their home.

Upon arrival, the guests were seated at card tables spread with grass linen and set with pottery. In the center of each was a miniature forest of maiden hair fern over which hovered a tiny silver airplane.

Place cards were little parachutes attached to the planes with white ribbons, and bearing the notation, "Time to bail out." At a given signal from the hostess, the guests pulled the tiny rings attached, and the opening parachutes dropped out the following notice written on parchment:

"U. S. A. License for Flying. This is to certify that Winifred Triplett and Floyd Wright have passed the official tests of acquaintance, friendship, courtship, love, and are ready, in September, for their license to fly through life together."

Ice cream and cookies shaped like airplanes were served, and games of hearts followed, with Miss Hazel Nelle Bemis winning first prize, a pottery vase, and Mrs. Lambert second, a pottery sugar and cream set.

The place cards and score cards were the artistic creations of Miss Bemis.

An interesting feature of the appointments was the exquisite lace table cloth which covered the dining room table, made of bits of rare old lace, some of which has been in the family for 50 years. It was made by Mrs. Triplett's sister, Mrs. W. N. Bush of McKinney, Texas.

Tall baskets of golden brown dahlias and other late summer blossoms decked the house, and graceful sprays of white phlox were arranged on the mantel and in the center of the table.

The Misses Bemis, Farla Nelle Clayton, and Jennie Clarke assisted the hostess.

The honored guest, who is a graduate of Santa Ana High school and a former student at the junior college, wore a charming dress of white puffery crepe with sapphire blue jacket of the same material and a corsage of salmon pink sweet peas.

Among the guests invited to hear of her betrothal were Marjorie Harden, Pauline Riley, Jeanette Roby, Mrs. Floyd Martin, Dorothy Gutsman, Mrs. Joe Wilson, Mrs. Paul Elmsner, Miss Alice Martin, all of Santa Ana; Mrs. Rose Hummell, Farla Nelle Clayton, Hazel Nelle Bemis of Laguna Beach; Mrs. Loris V. Cady of San Gabriel; Eva Vaughan of Long Beach; Mrs. Calvin Lambert and Mrs. A. E. McCarter of Tustin; Mrs. Jennie Clarke, Ruby Aabel, Ruby Miller, of Garden Grove; Mrs. George Healy of Costa Mesa.

Miss Triplett has made her home here for many years, attending Johnson's Business and Secretarial Institute after finishing school. She was employed for a time in the administrative offices of the WPA.

Mr. Wright, a prominent young aviator and businessman of Santa Ana, is owner and operator of the Floyd Wright School of Flying. He is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Wright of St. John, N. D., and is a member of the National Airplane Pilots' Association.

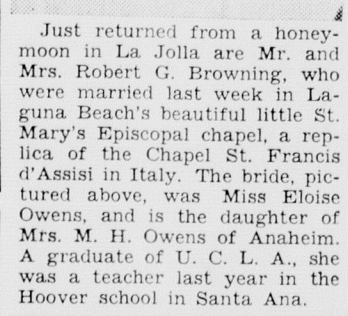

Both he and his bride-elect are members of the Orange County Pilots' Association, the latter being a student pilot at well as a prominent member of local musical circles.

Brides of January and July Greeted This Week

Just returned from a honeymoon in La Jolla are Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Browning, who were married last week in Laguna Beach's beautiful little St. Mary's Episcopal chapel, a replica of the Chapel St. Francis d'Assisi in Italy. The bride, pictured above, was Miss Elise Ward, and is the daughter of Mrs. M. H. Owens of Anaheim. A graduate of U. C. L. A., she was a teacher last year in the Hoover school in Santa Ana.

Midway City is the new home of Mrs. R. Cecil Farnsworth, the former Barbara Lois Hemphill of Blythe, Calif., whose marriage was solemnized last Sunday in the First Presbyterian church in Tustin. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Hemphill of Blythe, the bride has been teaching in that town this past year. Her husband is a son of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Farnsworth of Tustin, and is engaged in the agricultural business. The couple are honeymooning in the High Sierras.

Mrs. William Mize of West Seventeenth street honored Mrs. Carl Schroeder Friday afternoon at a lovely shower and party at her home.

Opening of the beautiful little gifts brought by the guests, and heaped on a card table in front of the delighted honored guest, took up the early part of the afternoon, intermingled with informal chat and a social time; and at the close of the day the 18 guests were invited to the dining room for a refreshment course.

One long table and two card tables were appropriately spread with covers patterned in storks and babies in a colorful array. Centerpieces were small baby buggies with pink and white mint coverlets. On the large table also was a large stork holding in its bill pink, blue and white ribbons which were attached at the other end to the buggy.

The salad course was served on pottery, and a large basket of mixed flowers filled a corner of the attractive room.

Guests in addition to Mrs. Schroeder were the Mesdames Marian Crum, Florence Watson, Muriel Bray, Olive Witt, Matilda Lemon, Lillian Gamp, Myrtle Ellis, Elizabeth Marsile, Genevieve Hickey, Dessie Waggoner, Rose Ford, Elva Selvidge, Martha Selvidge, Helen Noe, Darlene Lebo, and Gertrude Edsel, and the hostess and her mother, Mrs. Mae West.

Another park that came a little later in my life was the Busch Gardens in Pasadena, where one could spend days exploring its various nooks and corners and keep discovering new little figures out of one's favorite fairy tales.

There was always a search for Hansel and Gretel and their cookie house—our favorite, my sister's and mine.

One of the club's own members will address the Business and Professional Women's club at its meeting Monday night at 6 o'clock at the Doris Kathryn tea room.

Miss Lena Thomas will preside at the meeting which follows the club's bi-monthly dinner.

The trip to Hollywood Bowl, planned for Thursday of this week, was cancelled due to insufficient number of reservations, and it is hoped to arrange one for some time this month.

METZGARS HOME AFTER TRIP
Mrs. J. H. Metzgar and daughter, Eleanor, of 816 Bush street returned Thursday evening from a pleasant vacation trip north, stopping in San Francisco and visiting friends in San Jose on the way up. From there, they went over the Redwood Highway to Eureka to complete their two-week outing. Previous to their northern trip, the Metzgars enjoyed a week at Idyllwild.

CHAT AWHILE WITH BETTY

By BETTY COX
Since then, there have been many parks, some formal city layouts and others informal woody ones, but the one that has approached nearest to my childhood ideal of what a park should be is Irvine.

My first visit one night this week took me back to those neighborhood picnics which we used to have back in Michigan, and the big old trees gave me that same thrilly feeling I remember from my childhood.

Yes, there is something about a park, no matter where it may be—in the east or west, the north or south, youth or age.

Brides are still in the leading roles on our stage. We've 21 on our list now for August and the early fall, and every week brings new additions to the ranks of bride-to-be.

Helen Ferguson and Bernice Summers will be among the next to go up the aisle, both choosing Sunday, Aug. 9 for their nuptials.

August will see the departure of still other Santa Anans for vacation haunts, the F. C. Rowlands, including Mayor and Mrs. Rowland and daughter, Barbara, going to Forest Home this week for a month in their cabin, and the A. I. Mollenthins planning to go up to their Lake Arrowhead home about the tenth for the rest of the month.

'HEALTH' TO BE B. AND P. W. TOPIC MONDAY
One of the club's own members will address the Business and Professional Women's club at its meeting Monday night at 6 o'clock at the Doris Kathryn tea room.

The speaker of the evening will be Dr. Stella K. Davis, whose subject, "Health," is also the August topic of the B. and P. W. organization.

Keeping the news of her marriage a secret until the early part of this week, Miss Phyllis O'Connor, charming daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. P. O'Connor of Macksville, Kan., surprised her friends this week with the announcement that she and John E. Smith, son of Mrs. O. D. Smith of this city, had been married last January 2 in Yuma, Ariz. The bride is secretary to W. W. Foote in the physical education department at Santa Ana High school, and she and her new husband are making their home at 616 South Van Ness.

Invited by Mrs. C. M. Aker to meet informally with several of her friends Thursday afternoon, Mrs. Glenn Mustion did not discover until the end of the delightful afternoon that she was the guest of honor at a kitchen shower.

Mrs. Mustion, formerly Miss Vera Graham, is a recent arrival in the city, coming here from her home in Oklahoma a short time ago to become the bride of Glenn Mustion. The young couple have associated themselves with the Spurgeon Methodist church in this city, and it was because of the many friendships formed there that this group honored her Thursday.

During the afternoon, Mrs. Mustion had the pleasure of opening the various gifts of linens, crystal, and bright pottery which were brought to her by the guests and which will be put into immediate service in the newly established home at 116 North Lyon street.

An out-of-town guest at the party was Mrs. Emily St. John of Tucson, Ariz., who is a house guest of Rev. and Mrs. Aker, and the other guests were members of the Louise Aker and Jubilee circles of the church. Check Up On Child Health In Vacation

By CLAUD CHRISMAN, M. D.

Vacation is the time to have all diseased tonsils and adenoids removed.

If your child suffered from frequent colds last winter or had sore throat, a chronic cough or earache, have his throat and nose examined. If the tonsils are diseased they should be removed. The operation is safe and the pain is not severe. A clean throat will go a long way toward preventing infections.

All diseased or decayed teeth should either be removed or filled. Decayed teeth, bad tonsils and obstructed noses cause earache and deafness and occasion a child to be accused of having a bad disposition. A little careful examination and proper treatment cures many an incorrigible boy or girl. If your child is anemic, undernourished or generally below par, now is the time to correct it. Take him to your doctor, who will tell you what the trouble is and what to do about it.

We have sunshine, fresh air, time and opportunity to discover and overcome slight ailments. We have fruits, fresh vegetables, green things and all the elements needed to build up the body and increase the resistance. He will need all these when he enters school and is cooped up for what seem to him, long hours in a stuffy schoolroom with little sunlight and scant time to run and play. Do it now, and not in September.

Not the least important of the vacation checkups is in the matter of rest. Had it ever occurred to you that we can really store up energy, balance and nerve force for the grind of another year?

The summer needn't be altogether lazy but there should be a more liberal program of sleep and rest than is possible during the school term.

Rest in a darkened room is a restorative for the eyes and attention should be paid to the summer reading. Some listless children do nothing but read all summer.

It is a good idea, too, to insist on stricter attention to personal habits of cleanliness and elimination.

DAUGHTER BORN TO FORMER SANTA ANANS

Word was received this week from Tennessee telling of the arrival of a second little daughter in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brooks Graham of Trenton, Tenn., former residents of this city. KOOL KOOKERY

Dedicated to helping Santa Anans arrange cooling meals with a mini-luncheon and cooking, this column will present daily a recipe appropriate for hot-weather menus.

"Cool and quick?" Mrs. Paul Bailey thought a moment and then volunteered her solution to the warm weather desert problem.

She brings half a cup of grape-juice to the boiling point and pours it over half a pound of chopped marshmallows. After cooling it, she folds in half a pint of stiffly-whipped cream.

Into the refrigerator it goes for several hours, to emerge, softly lavender and refreshingly frosty. She serves great scoops of it in sherbet glasses, with a snowy puff of whipped cream on top.

To Mrs. "Another Responsibility" I would say: If you are not

Keep an Eye on the Eyes

By JACQUELINE HUNT

We cannot over-emphasize the importance of careful eye grooming during the summer vacation months. Glaring sunlight tends to make your eyes look pale, your eyelashes non-existent. With your richly tanned skins and warm red lips this state of affairs simply won't do, so if you are wise you will look into some of the new eye beautifiers.

There are two new preparations for the lashes to be used for daytime in place of mascara. One is an eyelash and eyebrow cream in a dark brown shade that brings out the natural tone of the lashes and encourages their growth. The other is an ointment made of rich, natural oils that stiffens the lashes just enough to help them curl, at the same time making them silky and healthy.

For swimming and active sports where you are apt to perspire, use a liquid mascara that you can apply confidently in the thought that it will not smudge or trail darkly down your cheeks, for once it has dried on the lashes it is waterproof.

You may not care for eye shadow on the tennis court, but for the dancing when you're wearing pastels or vivid flower prints, you might try aqua blue, pale spring green, violet, royal blue, light blue or olive green. For dancing on a moonlight terrace, try a touch of shadow or silk shadow with the shade you ordinarily wear.

Keep your eyebrows neatly shaped and groomed. Finely penciled brows are no longer considered fashionable, but neither are scraggly, shapeless natural brows. Follow the general line of the brow, but pluck away the stray hairs and make the line a little narrower if necessary to keep it clean-cut.

MARIANNE SMITH HONORED ON HER SIXTH BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Ridley Smith entertained at a gay birthday party Friday afternoon at her home at 2023 Greenwood street, honoring her little daughter, Marianne.

Because it is a July birthday, a patriotic theme is always followed in Marianne's birthday parties, and this year a vacation idea was added to the other.

Napkins and the rings which held them, candy cups and sailor caps for each place, were red, white, and blue and besprinkled with stars.

The centerpiece for one long table represented a marine scene, with a miniature sea, tiny ships, and a shell-strewn shore. Place cards were mermaids.

The table was set out in the yard where the little guests gathered for ice cream and a beautiful birthday cake trimmed with shells and six lighted candles. Many lovely gifts were also presented to Marianne.

Mrs. Milo Tedstrom assisted Mrs. Smith, as did also the latter's 8-year-old daughter, Noreen. Invited to help Marianne celebrate the happy occasion were Jimmie and Suzanne Paul, Zola Wright, Marilyn Wilson, Mary Katherine and Donna Olewiler, Mary Jean Tedstrom, Donnie Hohmes, Leland Finley, Jr., Leon Crawford, Marilyn Nelson, Susie Jane Ford, and Mrs. Graham. The latter, with Noreen Smith, helped direct the games of the younger children.

The occasion was Mr. Pearson's birthday, and a company of fourteen relatives and friends enjoyed the evening celebration.

Forgetting Difficulty Will Not Solve It, Daughter-in-law Tells Dependent Mother

By MARY STODDARD

Today comes advice from the other side of "Responsibility's" difficulty—being dependent upon her sons. It might well have been written by one of her future daughters-in-law.

Dear Miss Stoddard: Your answer to the mother calling herself "Another Responsibility" is encouraging and helpful but a little too idealistic, I would say. This conscientious mother is right; she is facing a problem, she is not exaggerating it, and she is forgetting about it will not help to solve it.

I am the 25-year-old wife of a dutiful son who has supported his mother for 12 years now, so perhaps I can present the other side.

When I married my husband two years ago, all his savings were given to me for providing for himself, so we college education for himself, and we started from scratch.

By the most rigid economy we have been able to care for mother, begin buying a little home and pay for our baby. But we were fortunate; my husband always had work and there was no illness, but under the present economic set-up providing for just wife and children is difficult enough for any man.

The son of this lady may feel, as do many men, that he cannot ask a girl to marry him unless he can provide for her as she is accustomed to. In that case, it may be he cannot allow himself to think of marriage for a long time if he must care for his mother, too, on a workingman's wages.

I know several fine men who provided for their mothers for so many years that they are still bachelors, as they could not marry sooner and are now too old to begin a family. No mother would wish this for her son.

Then again the son may not find a girl who would be willing to marry him unless he can provide well for her. I know, for my friends thought me extremely foolishly to marry as I did and told me they would never take such a chance.

To Mrs. "Another Responsibility" I would say: If you are not

DINNER HONORS LESLIE PEARSON

Leslie Pearson was pleasantly surprised this week with a chicken dinner given by his wife and sisters, Mrs. R. E. Grogan of Los Angeles and Mrs. J. Wiley Harris at Santa Ana, at the Harris cottage on Balboa Island.

The occasion was Mr. Pearson's birthday, and a company of fourteen relatives and friends enjoyed the evening celebration.

$20,000 NEWHALL FIRE
LOS ANGELES, (AP)—Damage estimated at from $15,000 to $20,000 was done the grain mill on the old Newhall ranch near Castaic.

True, his mount was long past the first fine flush of its youth, but Hynton felt instinctively towards the old horse a bond of sympathetic fellowship. He reined back to the outer fringe of the animated little crowd at the Five Ways Post and studied the scene attentively.

Mrs. Reeves looked splendid on her big dark bay; he noticed particularly how smart and trim her hair was looking; and when he saw her, he was struck by the manly, manlike; Reeves, who managed not to see the Inspector, looked the thruster that he was, and nobody would have mistaken Dale Shipley for anything but a horseman.

Hynton ran his eye over that quartet of diverse people a score of times. They had all been under one roof, as he knew, when the murder had been announced, and one of them, he was convinced, maybe more than one, knew more about the matter than had been admitted.

A long night's reflection had not made the Inspector any more pleased with the way the case was going. True, Lumsdale still had a good deal to explain; true, too, that friend Lumsdale was already, on the Inspector's orders, subject to a fairly close though unobtrusive supervision; but Hynton had a feeling that he was skimming on the surface of deeper waters than he knew of, and he was not satisfied until a good deal which he was certain was present being hidden from him came to light.

Doctor Chambers came tiptoeing up on a great, ungainly brute that had landed him at various times in practically every ditch in Sussex; he seemed very nervous and to be popular with everyone. It was not a big field, and there was only a sprinkling of pink coats, outnumbered by the people in ratcatcher, and the usual farmers' assortment of sporting clothes as diverse as their mounts.

"Hounds, gentlemen, please." The pack, 18½ couple, came pad-paddling along, their waving sterna like a feathery forest above them. Hard conditioned hounds were willing to face briar and bramble and the most punishing of going, sobeit they could do the one thing their nature craved for—kill.

Inspector Hynton eyed them reflectively, and it crossed his mind that there was a good deal of human life reproduced in miniature in a hunt. The wind freshened a little, and men turned to one another and prophesied, divergently, of that most mysterious of all nature's mysterious things—scents.

It was this little puff of freshening wind that carried the first signals of danger to the sleeping vixen in Seven Acre Spanney. She slept, and slept deeply, but, as all wild things, one of her acute senses remained on almost undiminished guard, and her soft muzzle had hardly done twitching at the danger-laden wind before her eyes opened and she was wide awake.

The vixen lifted a fore paw and licked it where a sharp stone in the bed of a brook had cut the pad a little. Then, as though coming to a sudden decision, she shook herself, turned her muzzle up hill and set off at a great pace as straight as an arrow for Hangman's Holt. The Morechester Hunt was in for the fastest thing of its life.

Kingsley Hynton's hack from the Hoops had not always been a mere hack. It had come down by a long series of successive degradations from an expensive state coach to a that ignominious position; it knew a great deal more about hunting than all the young horses out that day put together, and when it discovered that the man on its back was not altogether a fool at the game it set out to enjoy itself.

Hynton went with the best of them for a mile, but the pace was terrific, and three wide fields of plough put the old hack to the test of the hunt. The Inspector wasn't sorry; he had never intended to waste all the morning chasing a fox, he was after another sort of killer. Instead of following the other laggards through a field he turned uphill, trotted along the headland, and finding a convenient gap forced his way on to the gate-way in the bottom corner of the road.

There followed a slight argument with the hack whose ancient blood was fired with the excitement of the chase; but Hynton won, and was presently trotting steadily back towards Hope Cottage. The hunt had already traveled in a rough quarter of a circle so he was not as far away from the village as he might have been, and before long he was knocking at the door of Fielden Cottage, which Sergeant White had already pointed out to him as belonging to Dale Shipley.

Mrs. Somers opened the door, and her first cheerful smile at seeing a gentleman in riding clothes (such as they were!) soon yielded to a very different expression when Hynton began to ask questions, and she realized who he must be.

"I'm afraid I'm rather foolish about times and things like that," the Inspector said affably. "I just wanted to get it all quite plain about last Monday night."

"I can't tell you what I don't know."

"Quite so. It's what you do know I want to get at Mrs.—"

"Somers, thank you."

Tom Liddicoat, founder and president of the Los Angeles Tabernacle, will attend the 7:30 p. m. service tomorrow with a group of his workers.

Liddicoat and members of his party will conduct the services, telling of the mission work for which he has become nationally known.

WILL DISCUSS SHINTOISM

Shintoism, the national religion of Japan, will be discussed tomorrow evening at the Unitarian church. A series of summer lecture-sermons is being delivered at the church by the Rev. W. C. Parham.

"Shintoism is the primitive religion of Japan," said the minister, Miss Julia Budlong, in discussing the subject. "It bears many striking resemblances both to certain aspects of Catholicism, and to some forms of the Chinese national religion."

"It is a simple religion, however, without creed or dogma, moral tenets or sacred scriptures. Yet it commands the allegiance of 25,000,000 souls and has much to do with making Japan the conquering power that she is in the Far East. Can western nationalism meet that challenge, and how?"

SWIM CLASS PERIOD AT 'Y' ENDS

With more than 100 boys and girls taught to handle themselves in the water during the past six months, boys' secretary, D. H. Tibbals, of the Y. M. C. A., announced today that yesterday's swimming classes ended the formal program of swimming instruction which has been carried on in the Y pool for the last six weeks.

"Nearly 150 different children have been enrolled in the classes," said Tibbals. "About 125 of these have actually become able to swim across the pool, and a considerable number have passed their tests as 'beginners' and have thus been awarded their beginner buttons, which means that they can swim at least 20 yards with a good stroke. The accomplishments of the present season have been most satisfactory, both in the number instructed and in the progress they have made."

Tibbals has had direct charge of the swimming campaign with able assistance by Harris Warren, who will continue during August to give both class and individual instruction on a limited schedule.

While the regular campaign ended yesterday, it was stated by Tibbals that an arrangement has been made to accommodate a number of young folks who wish to carry on. There will be a class for boys on Monday and Wednesday mornings of next week at 9 o'clock, and a class for girls at 9:30 o'clock on the same mornings. Attendance will be limited and careful instruction will be given, Tibbals said.

The month of August at the Y. M. C. A. will be devoted largely to the annual housecleaning in preparation for the opening of the fall schedules. During this cleanup period, the regular schedule of gymnasium and swimming for members will be carried on. Recreational swims for boys and girls will be provided in the afternoon as usual, and all other classes for men and women will continue until the last week of August when the pool will probably be out of commission for a few days for cleaning and repairs.

Madame Modjeska, Who Achieved Fame on Stage, Lived in Orange Co.

(Men are remembered after their death for their unselfish service to their fellow men. Robert Gardner of Orange has written a series of articles about pioneers of this section, which The Journal will publish in order to preserve the memory and deeds of outstanding characters. Today's sketch tells about Madame Helene Modjeska.—Editor.)

Helen Modjeska served the world. She brought great art for hungry people to enjoy. She was the greatest tragedian of her day and she lived when the stage was at its best.

Orange county was her home. She built the delightful Forest of Arden in Santiago canyon where the green hills and the fine view brought happiness and content and rest.

She came to Anaheim with her husband, Count Charles Rozentz Chapowski, and a party of Polish immigrants. That effort of colonization cost her husband $40,000, and it proved a failure. The immigrants were not farmers.

In 1888 she retired to her home in the Santiago canyon after a most successful career. There she entertained a wide variety of friends.

The Pleasants were neighbors, in fact she bought the land on

Story of the Bible Told in Pictures

Boaz Finds Ruth Gleaning in the Field.—During the time of Israel under the judges, Elimelech, an Ephraimite of Bethlehem-Judah, and his wife, Naomi and their two sons went in time of famine and lived in the land of Moab. Here Elimelech died, and after about ten years his sons, who had married two of the daughters of Moab, Orpah and Ruth, died also. Naomi returned to her native town, and Ruth, who could not be dissuaded, accompanied her, casting in her lot with the people of Judah. The two women arrived in Bethlehem at the beginning of the barley harvest in a state of dire poverty. Elimelech had had an inheritance of land among his brethren, but, unless the next of kin could be found, Naomi would be compelled to sell it. Elimelech had a prosperous relative in Bethlehem named Boaz, who, like others, was engaged in the harvest. Naomi sent Ruth to glean in his fields. By the advice of Naomi, Ruth claimed kinship with Boaz. Boaz was willing to take up the duties of the next of kin, and married Ruth, by whom he became the father of Obed, the grandfather of King David. This illustration is by Merian, and was engraved in 1625.

Quilting "Bees" Choose Butterflies

Round up your friends for a quilting bee and see if they don't "go" for this cheery butterfly pattern! Indeed, the simple blocks will be pieced in no time, for with pattern pieces so simple, and materials limited to three, it's pleasant work that goes quickly. If you prefer, vary the butterfly wings with var-colored scraps, but keep the body uniform! In pattern 5663 you will find the Block Chart, an illustration for cutting, sewing and finishing, together with yardage chart, diagram of quilt to help arrange the blocks for single and double bed size, and a diagram of block which serves as a guide for placing the patches and suggests contrasting materials.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Journal, Household Arts Dept., 117 East Fifth street. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

TAXPAYERS in Orange County are feeling better today, if anyone asks you. The supervisors have just cut the inside city tax rate from 69 to 62 cents and the outside city rate from 73 to 64 cents. The decrease comes on top of a $7,000,000 drop in assessment rolls.

The tax cut and assessment decrease combined mean that your county general tax bills this year should be at least 10 per cent lower than last. This, of course, does not include the special assessment districts.

It's easy for taxpayers to gang up on the county board and demand a tax slash. But when it comes to cancelling some governmental service that the tax money is supporting, the aforesaid taxpayers aren't so willing. They want to have the cake and eat it, too.

Fortunately, no county service is going to be stinted by the new tax cut, since the reduction is made possible by a $223,205 balance carried over from last year, anticipated increase of revenue from other sources than general taxation, and an increase of federal allotments in various forms of relief.

With the downward move of taxes and the increase in business and building, both ends should not only meet but perhaps overlap a bit.

"The fire of Republican guns will be concentrated on the record of President Roosevelt's broken promises," says Chairman Hamilton. And the powder, we suppose, will be furnished by the du Ponts.

WE DO NOT know how much pressure there is behind the campaign sponsored by the National Temperance league to "advertise America into sobriety," or just how far it will get.

But we do know that a temperance movement is imminent in this country, where millions have been led away from temperance by 14 years of prohibition, and then by the reaction from that attempt to control people's habits by law.

If California brewers and wine dispensers are wise, they will get in on the movement and urge all other beer and wine interests to do likewise.

A well-directed campaign against the drinking of hard liquor and the over-indulgence in beer and wine will get results.

A recent Journal editorial about Sen. McAdoo's leadership seems to have stepped on somebody's toes. He is lucky we didn't step on his face.

"ORANGE county has only 18 highway patrol officers and could well use 35 if we are to keep down the appalling death toll on the highways," says Capt. Henry Mehan, commander of the local division of the patrol, in a Journal interview.

Certainly something drastic must be done promptly if the traffic massacre is to be abated. Highway deaths in this county during July totaled 19, one fatality every 36 hours. That compares to five deaths for the month last year, an increase of almost 300 per cent. Ghastly!

Capt. Mehan's proposal may be the right one. But it would be mighty expensive. We would rather see a less costly one tried first—such as mobilizing public sentiment behind the patrol and the courts for more arrests and stiffer sentences. It might be just as effective in halting the slaughter.

Pekingese dog is listed as a joke in the summer edition of the New York Social Register. Tough on the dog.

THE ITALIAN military news bureau at Addis Ababa is now calling all loyal Ethiopian troops "bandits." This name-calling doesn't fool the outside world, of course, because everybody knows that the Italians and not the Ethiopians are the real "bandits." But it probably is salve for uneasy Fascist consciences.

It reminds us of the ridiculous claim that the invasion was a "march of civilization." As if any true civilization would use poison gas, aerial bombs and machine guns on inoffensive women and babies!

Mussolini and his followers are aware of their crime. Otherwise they wouldn't resort to the cheap delusion of calling Ethiopian troops "bandits."

The best thing about golf is that the words come in so handy when changing a tire.

AMERICAN women yearly spend the colossal sum of $800,000,000 in pursuit of beauty. In Santa Ana, where most of the girls are so pretty they don't need much artificial help, the annual bill is probably $100,000, according to a feminine member of The Journal's staff.

Men shell out nearly $600,000,000 a year for manicures, hair tonics and the like, in spite of the House of David and the nudist gentlemen at the San Diego Fair.

Every 12 months $1,400,000,000! And we had always thought that beauty and brains didn't mix!

Cheer up, folks. The hot weather and the political campaigns will soon be over.

THE FAR-SIGHTED plan of Capt. Richard Harvey for attracting retired military officers to Orange county is beginning to bear fruit. Capt. Harvey, himself a new-comer, announces that already he has one recruit for his proposed colony, and that more are in prospect. Orange county should provide a cordial welcome to these retired military men. They are the finest kind of citizens.

Whimsies of O. O. McIntyre

This is the hot day for which I have been waiting all summer. All summer I have. To launch myself in my white linen suit.

A certain lady intimated that wearing it I look like a locust that had run through a pan of milk. But do I care a fig?

She seems to have an idea that when I appear in public they'll take me for a white-tie or that someone will say: "Put mine on rye, buddy!" You know, I don't like a drug store sandwich clerk. Anyway as Charlie Butterworth used to say, "All in white!" Here I go. Keep the crowds moving, officer.

The elevator man seems to be giving me the eye. As though he is going to say: "Deliveries at the rear." It takes courage to break in a white suit. Mark Twain once wrote a piece about it. I should have had a backyard to practice in. Anyway I've worn out a couple of mirrors rehearsing.

The thing to do is to saunter. I'm walking entirely too fast. A little more speed and I'll be in a gallop. Pin back my ears and I'm no slouch of a sprinter either. Give me a dark street after midnight with no cop around and I'll make it in zero flat. I must get under control.

I'll idle before this window. Nonchalant. No, that's no good. A sign says: "Sale of White Linen." They might wrap me up in a package and the next thing I'd know I'd be opened up at a sewing bee in Hoboken, N. J. Don't look now but I think my left pants leg has gone on a hike. It feels as though it had reached my knee. And either there is a buzzing in my ears or somebody behind is sniggering. What does a fool like me want to walk around looking like a plate of ice cream for anyway? The trouble with New York is that there are no alleys to sneak up.

That fellow on the sprinkling cart doesn't seem to be up to any good. One close up swish from him and white linen goes polka-dot. I feel like breaking into a run again. I must be calm. This is no time for panic. Have the band strike up something by Sousa. So I'll feel marchy. Thousands of people all over the world are wearing white suits today. Why should I feel so conspicuous. Who am I anyway? Will everybody please stop up their ears while I berate myself. (Think everybody's looking at you! Mighty skinny looking, if you ask me, yank, yank, yank.) There I feel better. That was what I needed. A good bawling out.

Good heavens, I don't believe I thought to take the price tags off the sleeves. I'll stop and remove them as though picking off bits of fluff. A Clarence off the pie wagon picking off bits of fluff! Here I'm berating myself again. What was it Carlyle said about self-condemnation? Something about the man who condemns himself being a partner of the Devil. I'd look nice prancing around with Old Nick today—him in red and me in white. Well, here I am ready for the plunge into Fifth avenue. I've just been side-streetsing this way to work up courage. I'm full of courage now. Feel my arm muscles. I dare any mug to chirp: "What are you advertising, fella?"

That fellow grinning in front of Cartier's. He's not so hot himself. Him and his checkered pants and purple blazer. One of those Talks of the Campus. Rah, rah rah! What's the matter with this white suit, you smiling baboon? Once when I got sarcastic this way I walked up to a smart alec in the Gibson House in Cincinnati and told him to go comb his hair. And there was the time in Dayton, O. I went into a blind rage in a billiard hall and walked right out with a fellow's cue chalk. Sometimes when the tiger is aroused I don't know my strength.

Wish I could find a chip to put on my shoulder. Glance at my lips, the way they are stuck out. Am I in a pout! Headline: Old Fury Parades the Avenue in White! There, I might have expected something like that. Working myself up this way I stepped off a curb for a pip of a tongue bite. Now for a day or two I'll be 'awking 'like iss. One minute a chump out for a walk in a white suit and the next a baby talker. Goody, goody. I'm rounding into the home stretch and once shucked off this outfit I'll be Little Boy Blue or anything but something in white. I suppose I should be grateful for one thing. So far my fountain pen has not exploded in my pocket. At least I don't think it has. But even at that I'm afraid to look.

The Merry-Go-Round

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN

WASHINGTON.—There is something a little pathetic about the candidacy of Bill Lemke for the presidency of the United States.

He stands there, so cocksure, so confident, so smiling, smirking, so ready to talk about his campaign. You feel like taking him aside and warning him that he shouldn't talk so much or the newspapermen will take advantage of him. Then you realize that Bill wouldn't take kindly to that advice and you let him go on.

"When I become president," he says, "I'll be like Andrew Jackson, who tied his horse to a hitching post in front of the White House. I'll let the people come in. I'll be at home to everybody. But of course, I can't see everybody. There'll have to be some arrangements made about that."

At first you think this is just Bill Lemke's sense of humor. But pretty soon he repeats himself.

"When I am elected" and "when I take over the White House." There is no doubt about it. Lemke has talked himself into a hypnotic conviction that he is on the threshold of the White House already.

KILLS HIMSELF
A group of congressmen were discussing Lemke's candidacy in the house restaurant just before the session adjourned, and one of them, a Republican, said:

"I know one sure way of licking Lemke. Have him appear regularly in the newspapers in every moving-picture house in the country. His face and voice are all that's needed to defeat him."

It is true that God must have been looking elsewhere when He fashioned the features of Bill Lemke. His bald, egg-shaped head has a dour, bucolic look, with which his smile—one of those frozen chorus girl varieties—is weirdly incongruous.

Lemke has been campaigning for public office most of his adult life, but his voice still strikes the audience with the soothing effect of a circus calliope. And apparently he has an inexhaustible supply of steam and no discretion in using it.

COMPLETE CONFIDENCE
"I really expect to be elected," he says. "A short time ago I stopped off to see Governor Olson of Minnesota. He's in a hospital. His enemies are trying to make out he's much sicker than he is. 'After I'm elected, one of the first things I'm going to do is to restore all the little lakes and ponds that they used to have out in Minnesota and the Dakotas. 'Those ponds have all disappeared. I propose to build 400,000 lakes and ponds. They will store up water and can be used for irrigation. Another thing, they seem to attract rainfall.'"

GERMAN FATHER
Lemke harps on these ponds several times, and later you learn that when he was three years old he was hit by a chip flying from his father's axe, and the old German settler told him to get out of the way. William started to run, and late that night his mother found him sitting on top of a muskrat house in the middle of a pond, soaking wet, covered with mud from top to toe.

That is Bill Lemke's earliest recollection. He was born on a farm near Albany, Minn., not far from the Lindbergh home. But his father, who had migrated from Germany, moved on to the Da-

On the report that a man had fallen dead at Fourth and Baker streets last night, the nightwatchman, both constables, Deputy Sheriff Jernigan, County Physician Wehrly, several motor patrolmen, newspapermen, and half a hundred prominent citizens rushed to the scene. It was found that a Mexican had fallen from a buggy, and being considerably under the influence, had been dragged to one side of the street. Constable Squires escorted him to jail.

Open Season on Candidates

THE GREAT American whirligig is winding up again. The shooting gallery resounds with grunts and groans as the shots take effect. Sweating candidates flop hither and yon as the dizzy pace swirls round and round. Much yipping and squawking, bruised shins, ruffled tempers. Many casualties but no fatalities. Experience comes in big chunks. Much wailing and gnashing of teeth, and a good time is had by all.

The old Romans had a good custom. All seekers for public office wore white robes. (The word "candidate" means white or glittering.) They paraded before the people who voiced their approval or otherwise. The white-robed actor drawing the loudest applause got the office. White has always stood for purity of purpose. Hence, it was particularly appropriate for candidates. That's why certain politicians drape themselves in white trousers and white shoes, topping off the picture with a white pan-

ATTACKS ON NEW DEAL IN THE COURTS

To the Editor: Two attacks on the New Deal illustrate how short-sighted are the views of some who hold to the doctrine that private advantage, convenience or whim should outweigh the public welfare.

In Schlechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, (U. S. Rep.) 79 L. Ed. 1570, the plaintiff, a wholesaler in poultry, under the National Recovery Act was doing a prosperous business, but concluded that an Act that controlled the hours of work and pay of its employees, as well as regulated its business, was a detriment and a violation of its liberties, so suit was filed to test it. The Supreme Court held the Act unconstitutional. The Schlechters regained what they fancied were their lost liberties, but, under unfair and ruinous competition which the NRA was designed to overcome, their business became unprofitable and they recently went into bankruptcy.

In Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, (U. S. Rep.) 80 L. Ed. 427, the plaintiff, a stockholder of the Alabama Power Company, filed suit to hamstring the TVA, whose anticipated competition it was believed might be injurious to the private power companies, but the Supreme Court of the United States held the Act constitutional.

The TVA embraces far-reaching public projects. It was designed to improve the navigation of the Tennessee River; to control and prevent floods in the Tennessee and Mississippi basins; to conserve the soil and prevent further disastrous erosion in a vast region; to develop electric energy by means of the Wilson Dam, the Norris and other dams, for the production of nitrates used in soil fertilization, and chemicals used in munitions manufacture; to furnish cheaper electric light and energy for industrial use; to furnish electric light and energy for ordinary homes in a wide territory; and to modernize antiquated dwellings in the South. Incidentally, work was furnished to many thousands of unemployed.

The purposes of the Act were so praiseworthy, and its easily foreseen effects so obviously beneficial, that one might well imagine that not even those whose philosophy of government is that the public welfare should be subordinated to special interests would oppose the plan.

It appears from the Public Utilities Fortnightly, issued in June, 1936—available at any Public Library—that the rates of the TVA were used as a yardstick, and the private companies reduced their rates one-half to conform; that in the affected portions of Tennessee, Mississippi and Alabama, an increase of residential consumption of electricity in about two years exceeded 200 per cent, and has grown more than in any other part of the United States; and that residential consumption of electricity furnished by the Tennessee Electric Company, Alabama Power Company, and Georgia Power Company is in the general TVA area is now 50 per cent higher than the average residential consumption in the nation.

According to a survey made by the Electrical World, these three private utility companies operating in the TVA region, for the year 1935 expended all utility companies east of the Rocky Mountains in residential kilowatt consumption of electricity.

Further, it appears that the named companies have experienced substantial increases in both gross and net incomes, as a result of the TVA development, the reduced rates of electricity, and the enlarged use of electricity; and that they are now among the chief beneficiaries of a successful public program which they tried to crush and defeat.

Dr. Pullen, of North Broadway fame and world-wide travel, is home from a ten days' camping trip to the Fallside district, where he collected movie pictures of the big falls and other scenic spots. He put in a busy time. The first day he put in a Japan camp, did a little trout fishing, visited the postoffice, listened to the roar of Mill creek and watched the thermometer, which ran the scale from 52 to 86.

I do not know what the first of the month means to you but I know what it means to me, so I just get out the old check book and start writing and keep it up until the bank tells me to quit.

I have a friend who informed me that when he got his vacation he was going to stay home. When a neighbor told me that my friend had a mint bed in the backyard I concluded that he had gone to sleep in it. At least that could be one reason why I haven't seen him.

One of these days when I do not have anything else to do I'm going to start a cafe. There is always something doing. You are either moving in or moving out.

Fem friend plans a vacation and arranges for everything but the care of a canary. After being nursemaid for a few years, where to park the bird is some problem. It's easier to dispose of hubby than the canary. About the only difference is you know where one bird is, and don't know about the other.

I'm to get a card from Twin Lakes, according to a report from a returning vacationist. He said he mailed it, put my name on the card, but he insists I should get it. Well if he put a stamp on the card. He did. The card arrived this afternoon, which reinstates my friend among the truthful.

They've finally decided they don't want a cemetery at Laguna Beach. Which establishes the slogan definitely that "Laguna is a place to live, not a place to die."

Someone wanted to talk. Call went through from Huntington Beach to Switzerland at $42 for the first three minutes. Boy, she would have had to have everything to get me to part with $42. Say, she could have yodeled back to sweetie for less money than that. What is that old stuff about love always finds a way? And probably dad has to pay.

My Knights of Columbus friends are going to give their sixth annual picnic tomorrow at the Sycamore picnic grounds in the Santa Ana canyon. They are going to serve a fine lunch and give away an automobile. I'm not very hungry, so if the car is offered to me I'll take it.

Next Saturday the Long Beach Iowa picnic will be held in Bixby's park. I have an invitation to mix with that crowd. Guess I'll go over as grandson wants to use the playground equipment and we haven't any in Santa Ana—at least not in the parks.

Now that the surprise in politics is over the candidates having been notified of their nomination the more serious aspect of the campaign will develop, and I've got a hunch there won't be a day pass from now until the November election that you can't get into an argument, if you want to.

Drouths may be all right for the fellow who speculates but they are tough for the fellow who has to put the eggs and bacon and cereals on the breakfast table. Scarcely skyrocket prices, and there are none too many in the world today who can afford to stand the higher scale. I would rather live in a land of plenty than a land of scarcity.

Well, there is some chance for some, but it's getting narrower all the time. The New York social register has listed in the Blue Book a Pekingese dog. The outlook for me, however, is much improved. I've been leading a dog's life for a long time.

A Midwest correspondent who last winter spent $400 for fuel, would appreciate some method whereby the excessive summer heat could be canned, to be released during the coming winter. This is a job for the scientists. I'm too busy, and then I wouldn't know how, anyway.

"Shorty" Hauck worrying about the deadline on reports. End of the month and 4 o'clock the zero hour. But when the boss says "you better have 'em here," well, why worry about that? Just have 'em there and the boss hasn't anything more to say. I met several hundred fellows yesterday who filed report complaints with me. It has been my experience that you can get a complaint when you can't get a compliment.

Nature's Grandeurs In West Astounding to World

Land Of Romance, Wealth, Beauty

"He must do a lot of learning
Who would be West wise."

OREN ARNOLD.

IF YOU have always lived in the West, it is quite probable that you are completely unconscious of the fact that you dwell in a land of mystery and charm, enchantment and great strength! One easily grows accustomed to beauty — also to a life of luxury. All you need to do is to go East for awhile and live within the confines of city apartments to realize how grand the West can be!

As Oren Arnold has said, in his recently published book, "Wonders of the West" (Banks Upshaw and Company), "he must do a lot of learning who would be West wise," meaning that there is so much to know about this picturesque land that it requires much study to really be informed.

Here in your home land is the world's greatest natural wonder, the Grand Canyon; here, too, are fantastic stone wonders, such as Venus' Needle; the world's largest trees, such as the Sequoia (adorning this unknown land long before the Christ was born), and Washington's Mount Rainier, one of the most beautiful mountains in the world!

You see "the world" enters this report quite often but actually there is no other comparison — the finest things in the world actually are in the West!

There is the breath-taking beauty for instance etched by sunshine and snow, presented by Mt. Cameron, reflected like a great diamond in Lake McDonald, Montana, and Yosemite Falls dropping 2565 feet, commonly called "one of the grandest sights in all the world."

PICTURED here you have sheer fantasy in sand, exquisite designing by the desert winds — a glimpse of the real American Sahara in southeastern California, certainly something worth seeing — and once seen never to be forgotten!

Again we come to that comparison and say the largest room in the world is in Carlsbad, the mystery kingdom, and it's 750 feet under ground. This is what is known as "The Temple of the Sun."

Driving or flying over the great expanse of land one finds strange homes of a forgotten people seen in caves high on the sides of western mountains. Some of them are the Tonto Cliff Dwellings of Arizona, and other cliff palaces and pueblos where the ancients lived long before white men first came to this country.

Certainly nothing anywhere surpasses in beauty and inspiration those western shrines, the mission-fortresses still standing as relics of the days when Spanish fathers first made the land habitable.

Indians Still Provide a Picturesque Background For Many Sections of the West, Although They Have Ceased To War With the Whites and Now Live a Peaceful Life On Their Reservations.

The West still has its Indians — and loves them. They, you see, are the real Americans — men and women who can truly boast of belonging to "The First Families" of the land. Pictured here is Jack Moses and Jane Charles, who were recently "Qua-le-ales-and-so-te-le-so" — in Indian language, united in marriage. Jack Moses is of the Puyallup and Cowlitz tribe, while his bride is of the Snohomish tribe. Their marriage united two of the oldest Northwestern tribes — and it made the front page in many newspapers!

HERE is what Oren Arnold says of the colors of the Grand Canyon, in his "Wonders of the West":

"Now, what of the Canyon colors?
"Ay, what of them! Who can really tell about colors? Oh, we can name them — there are whites and buffs and tans, reds in profusion and every shade of purple and blue, greens and golds and rainbow tints of every possible kind. The limestones, sandstones, shales, and granites that dominate in the Canyon's rocks are not drab and dreary. They are fantastic with color's show. The sun glorifies them like the fade-in glows and the spotlights of a theater — No! It is the theater that tries in a puny way to imitate sunlight on the Grand Canyon — we must not get the comparison reversed.

Venus' Needle. A Unique Design in Stone, Caused By Erosion.

"But who can really enable you to know, by print or speech, what incomparable color-beauty the Canyon holds? Who can cast in words the light-spell of the place? Can you speak or write adequately of a color-bursting sunset? Can you accurately describe the fleeting majesty of a lightning and rainstorm? Yet sunsets and storms are but side shows within the Grand Canyon — you might actually see both of them in there at once!

"There is a way for you to know the Canyon's color-beauty; only one way, absolutely only one. No camera, no words, no artist can really help; man's effort to reproduce it usually is but an affront. Still, there is a way for you to know.

"Yes, you have guessed it. Go, as soon as you can, and as often as you can. There are fine accommodations for the humblest camper, or luxurious quarters for visitors with millions to spend. Nowhere else in the world will you find scenery so exciting, so inspiring."

You see he uses "the world" in his comparisons too! You just can't help it for you see the West is the grandest place in the World!

Sixty Seconds From Life

"SILENCE"
By John Richard Finch

SUN drenched the parade grounds with waves of burning heat. Rolling in from the Sahara like the blazing blast of a furnace, a dry, parching wind struck at the faces of the marching Legionnaires with cruel, taunting fingers of invisible fire. At intervals sharp commands split the white heat of the morning, burning into the minds of the weary marching men with an unrelenting intensity as fierce as the desert sun. The company of bleus—raw recruits from the Continent—were getting their baptism of fire. Fixed bayonets, glistening like silver shafts of molten metal, pointed to the tri-color of France waving over the barracks. Legionnaires of France, though they come from the four corners of the earth! Colonel Fouchette, acting Commandant at Sidi-bel-Abbes, watched the drilling bleus from his desk in the Administration Building, subconsciously appraising them with a practiced, critical eye, though his mind was struggling with a problem which did not concern recruits, but a seasoned Legionnaire, an intelligent, clever, but strangely baffling soldier of fortune, who went his mysterious way in the Legion, refusing to acknowledge his true identity and claim a vast inheritance which awaited him in his homeland.

On the edge of the Colonel's desk sat a Legionnaire—at least he wore the uniform of the French Foreign Legion. His eyes, too, were on the drilling bleus. Weariness was written in every line of his shrewd Teutonic face, burned brown by the Algerian sun.

"Me, Karl Krantz, in the Foreign Legion! Six months already in this hell, including what those poor devils out there are getting. I'm fed up, I tell you. I want you to get a wireless through to Berlin tonight. I'm through with this comedy, or perhaps I should say tragedy—at least for me. Heinrich is mad. Perhaps the Legion has done that to him! It would not be surprising! He can't be sane! No sane man would ignore a fortune of 5,000,000 marks to remain in the Legion. It's fantastical! Yes, I'm giving up. I'm catching the next ship from Oran back to Marseilles and then Berlin—home!" The Legionnaire spoke in French with a thick Teutonic accent. Colonel Fouchette tapped the desk nervously with his fingertips. There was a tone of annoyance in his voice when he spoke.

"Is not Monsieur Krantz paid well by Heinrich's attorneys for his time in the Legion? Was it not at your own request that you became a Legionnaire so that you might uncover information leading to the identity of Heinrich? We have given you every possible assistance, Monsieur, and you are free to return to Germany at any time. You forget, apparently, that it is yourself and those you represent who are seeking out this man—not the Foreign Legion."

"YOU are right, Colonel. I apologize. But you can understand my feeling. I have a family, a wife, children, in Germany. When I came to Sidi-bel-Abbes I had no idea of the task that lay before me. The attorneys in Berlin told me Heinrich had been traced to the French Foreign Legion—that he refused to reveal his identity and employed me to come here and find him. It seemed fairly simple, although there were no pictures of him to go by, except one taken as a child, and, with the death of his father, not even a fair description. But I had solved what seemed to me then like more difficult cases, and I came here full of confidence. I admit I have failed. I have traced him down to the very company I know he must be in, but a dozen men in that company might be Heinrich. Every one of them have convincing stories that seem to prove beyond the question of a doubt that they are not Heinrich. I live with these men—eat, drink, sleep, work, march, fight. I know them, every one, yet I can't say which of them is Heinrich."

Out on the parade grounds the company of bleus were being dismissed. Gratefully, they sought the shade of the barracks. Suddenly, the Colonel stopped his nervous tapping, turning toward Krantz.

"We shall have one more try at it, Monsieur Krantz. I shall summon the commander of your company. I shall order him to assemble his men and announce the inheritance publicly. If Heinrich rick has ever even whispered a word of his true identity to even one of his comrades perhaps we have a chance."

"Splendid, Colonel." A new enthusiasm shone in Krantz' eyes. "We have perhaps kept it a secret too long. Your experiment may work where all mine have failed. When shall it be?"

"Immediately after mess." Pressing a button, Colonel Fouchette summoned an orderly. Krantz stood at rigid attention while the Commandant issued the order to the Legionnaire. When the man had gone, the Colonel contemplated the German agent with an amused smile.

"I'm afraid we've made a soldier of you after all, Monsieur Krantz," he observed dryly.

Krantz wiped the sweat from his brow with the arm of his uniform jacket, smiling ruefully despite himself.

OUT on the parade grounds a company of Legionnaires faced a stern-eyed, determined sergeant-major. He had just come from Colonel Fouchette where he had heard the story of Heinrich from the Commandant's own lips. He had his orders. Heinrich was in his company. He must be identified. A silence of expectancy hung over the company of Legionnaires. Something unusual was in the air—each and every man felt it. The burning heat of the sun was for the moment forgotten. They waited for the sergeant-major to speak.

"Attention." Boot heels clicked together as he gave the command.

The sergeant-major glared up and down the line, then plunged into a curt, brief explanation. One of them had inherited a fortune. He could easily buy his way out of the Legion, return to his homeland and live like a king for the remainder of his days. The man's true name was Heinrich, and had been traced to this very company. For some strange reason he had so far refused to reveal his identity, but he must do so now. Heinrich was ordered to step forth in the name of the Republic of France. Not a man moved. The sergeant-major cursed and walked up and down before the line, scrutinizing the face of each Legionnaire.

Five million marks! Was the man mad—a fool? He had committed no crime. There was nothing to fear, no reason to hesitate. The sergeant-major glared at the men with threats, pleas, but of no avail. In disgust he then tried individual cross-examination. Half the men were quickly eliminated—obviously not Germans. Most of the other half were likewise ruled out, it being evident at a glance that they were of peasant birth, whereas it was known that Heinrich came of a cultured and distinguished family.

Only five remained, all Teutonic, with speech and manners that would qualify. Not one of them would confess that he was Heinrich! The more the sergeant-major bullied and argued, in his attempt to solve the mystery, the more stubbornly non-communicative the men became. A thousand marks were offered to the man who would identify Heinrich, but still there was no response. Finally despairing, the sergeant-major dismissed the company and, in utter disgust, started for headquarters to make his report.

KRANTZ was with Colonel Fouchette when the sergeant-major came in. He saluted the Commandant, standing stiffly at attention before his desk.

"I regret to report—" he began.

"Yes, I know," the Colonel interrupted wearily. "We have been watching you from the window. Our plan has failed." Then, facing his subordinate, "I commend you on a thorough job, sergeant. No one could have done more. That is all—you may go."

Saluting, the sergeant-major did a right-about-face and started for the door. His eyes rested on Krantz for a moment before he disappeared over the threshold.

True to his word, Krantz left Sidi-bel-Abbes that night for Germany. His failure was complete. The incident was the gossip of the post for a few days, then forgotten. Occasionally, Legionnaires of the company in which Heinrich was said to be, were the butt of jests from their comrades. It was not long, however, before the story of Heinrich was a closed incident—closed until some two years later when Heinrich, dishonorably discharged from the Legion—a promise he had made himself when he enlisted—appeared in Berlin to claim his fortune. It was then that the story became a legend with the Legion, and today may be heard in Sidi-bel-Abbes, or wherever the Legionnaires congregate.

Heinrich was the sergeant-major!

ONE of the big trans-Pacific steamers that follow the great circle course in the Asiatic trade, had cast off her lines and was moving slowly seaward. Smoke from her funnel followed the line of her keel, fading with her wake. The Skipper's lip curled as he eyed the big liner from the pier. Headwinds meant but little to her crew!

"Not like the old days in square-riggers, huh, Skipper?" There was a familiar ring to the voice, and with a last scornful peep in the direction of the steamer, the Skipper turned toward the man beside him.

"Well, I'll be scuttled! Bosun, where'd you come from?"

"Outa' the belly o' that hooker ye see puffin' her inards out there," and, displaying a shiny cargo hook, "I've been stevedorin' for nigh on to ten years now. They can't starve me into going t' sea in one o' them soojee-moojee, chippin' hammer smoke pots. Now with sail!"

"With sail! Ah, those were the days," the Skipper interrupted, a proud enthusiasm in his voice. "Remember when we was in the old Brasos together, Bosun?"

"Well, I do that," came the answer, as the Bosun drew forth a snuff box and removed the lid with a deft turn.

THE Skipper watched him smilingly as he slipped a wad of "snoots" under his lip, which made his mustache stand out like the bristles of a walrus.

"You used to kinda spray the taffrail with that stuff when you was at the wheel," mused the Skipper.

"But we swabbed 'er down while the dew was on 'er," the Bosun answered defensively.

In the silence that followed each was lost in reverie. Deep-laden and light in fancy they put the Brasos into stays. Through rough and fair weather, with sails bellied in the breeze, they once again nosed trim clipper-bow ships into far seas. The memory-mongers were reaching backward for every little detail.

"Bosun, do you remember the fellow that was demoted from Lobos Cay in the Bahamas?"

The Bosun nodded, chuckled and spat over the cap of the dock. Each in his own way recalled the comic tragedy of a poor "Limey" lighthouse keeper who was transferred to the most lonely station in the West Indies because he was happy and wanted to let the world in on it. Of course, he went about it in the wrong way, and, like most things that are tackled wrong, it caused him trouble.

BUT it was funny when a British man-of-war cruising in those waters, sighted "N. J." of the International Code whipping in the Northeast Trades, and sent an armed landing party ashore. Cautiously approaching the little island, they were greeted by the lighthouse keeper, all rigged out in his newest uniform. He knocked off an eyebrow with a salute, and grinning from ear to ear explained to them that so much joy had crept into his heart that he simply had to share it with the world.

The next moment his "great joy" was being dissipated by a weedy two-striper, who proceeded to call him seven kinds of idiot, among other things, and informed him that his job wasn't worth a sixpence from then on. The landing party, unceremoniously, and in its most disciplinary sternness, returned to the waiting warship, and not many days passed before an order came to the keeper transferring him to the "ends of the earth."

THE Skipper had always felt the punishment had been too severe, and so had the Bosun. Even though "N. J." meant, "I am attacked—Want Assistance," and had nothing to do with celebrating the birth of an eight-pound boy, it was still too severe a penalty.

"Yes, Skipper, I remember it just like it was yesterday," said the Bosun. Catching the Skipper's eye, he nodded suggestively toward the "First Chance."

And speaking of memories—if you had any you didn't want, you could always drown 'em in that place.

IN THAT black hour of night, just before the dawn, a long-boat put out from the Santa Ana, richly laden Spanish treasure ship.

The phosphorescent waters rippled beneath her bow; the oars, dipped ever so quietly by the six rowers, left a trail of shimmering silver in their wake.

Around Point Loma, in San Diego Bay, they silently stole their way; touched on the far sandy shore, trudged with three huge chests to the pueblo lands on the hill.

There they buried those three chests with their gold and jewels from Spain, their treasure from Cathay, their gems from the crowns of potentates in far-off India.

Today, that treasure lies wherever it was hidden in those lands; lies hopelessly lost forever somewhere in Balboa Park, which, in 1936, is the site of the California Pacific International Exposition.

Thus the tale has persisted through the ages. Far from one to delight children, historians point out the logic in its recital. For the Santa Ana, in 1587, when the valiant Capt. Rodriguez Cermeno was at her helm, was captured and pillaged. This was off the coast of Lower California, the tale reciting how those fierce sea rovers, Capt. Woods Rogers and Capt. Tom Cavendish, searched her high and low but found her wealth had flown.

The wily Captain Cermeno, so the legend says, knew the treachery of the waters he was to sail; hid a treasure he never came back to claim.

Eight years after the English captains had robbed him, and failed to get the greater part of his treasure, he wrecked the San Agustin in Drakes Bay on the way back from Manila. This was north of the present San Francisco Bay, then undiscovered, but in his log he gives it this name. Undaunted, he set his crew to building a long-boat from the wreckage of his vessel; set out with 70 of crew and passengers to finish his voyage southward.

HE BOLDLY christened his new craft the San Buenaventura, or St. Goodadventure. It carried him safely to Mexico, after he had stopped at Catalina Island, paused off San Diego Bay, apparently conjecturing whether or not to retrieve his three hordes of gold, sailed on and away into history, never to return again.

There, in the Harbor of the Sun, under the looming cliffs of Point Loma, the caravels of Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo rode just 50 years after Columbus had discovered the other side of America.

That brave Portuguese adventurer, sailing for the King of Spain, thus gave his own name to California's history and to an Exposition which, in part, honors him and all the early pioneers of California. For San Diego, first city, first settlement in the state is a fitting site for such an Exposition.

All manner of strange ships have sailed the waters around and beyond this tip of California, the Mexican mainland and islands which one glimpses from the Cabrillo Bridge on the world's fair grounds.

From the first explorer's tiny caravels to the world-girdling liners and mighty battleships of America's modern fighting force, they ride the same Bay Cabrillo, Cermeno and all the others rode on silvered nights and brilliant days.

Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo, Who Discovered San Diego Bay in 1542.

SHIPS they were of four centuries; Manila galleons, the Spanish treasure boats, coursed southward off this coast homeward bound from Cebu or Manila to Acapulco during 250 years. For, homeward bound, they made Cape Mendocino, on the northern shore of California, their landfall; ran down to Acapulco under the stiff northwesterly winds that filled their sails.

Sometimes the lumbering treasure ships, crews dying of thirst and scurvy, missed the northern cape and blundered into sight of land near San Diego. Gemelli Careri, commander of the annual galleon of 1697, reported he made his first landing at Catalina Island after he had battled the sea 204 days.

Occasionally these Spanish treasure-laden vessels were pillaged; many a time some free-booter overtook them off the coast of Lower California.

When the Manila galleons were riding off-shore, Sebastian Vizcaino, formerly the commander of such a vessel himself, came sailing into San Diego Bay with a flotilla of three ships. It was he who gave these waters and the city their name, and that was in far-off 1602.

Next through the Silver Gate came the little packets bearing the first Spanish soldiers and priests and, in the name of the King, set up a base on San Diego Bay for the land expeditions which later were to continue on through the peninsula of Lower California.

These were the men ordered to take possession of new or upper California in the name of His Most Catholic Majesty Charles the Third. And, with one of these caravans, was the modest, unassuming genius, founder of our Missions, the famed Franciscan friar, Junipero Serra.

THE north-bound voyage of the little boats which linked San Diego to the outside world in those early years, often stretched into interminable days and weeks and months. The first of them all to arrive, the San Antonio, under Capt. Juan Perez, was 55 days en route from La Paz, in Lower California, to San Diego Bay. But her sister ship, the San Carlos, which had sailed from La Paz ahead of her, took 110 days at sea! Both arrived with the majority of their crews and passengers dead or ill with scurvy; the first burials of white men on the shores of this bay were from the numbers of these unfortunates.

In 1800 the flag of a new nation, recently established on the eastern shores of this continent, came sailing into the bay. It was then the brig Betsy of Boston, rounding the narrows in cautious New England manner, proudly flew her ensign, the red, the white, the blue of the 13 colonies.

The word-of-mouth advertising which the captain and the crew of the Betsy gave California sent other ships from Yankee shores out to cast for new trade with these Spaniards, and in the harbor of San Diego was built the great hide-mart—the "leather dollars" of California.

Then, in the peace and the quiet which had settled on these shores, came more pirates!

Bouchard it was who bore down the coast with two heavily-armed ships, plundering from Monterey to San Juan Capistrano, at the gates of San Diego.

Bouchard and his motley crew threw California into panic. Attacking first at Monterey, Refugio, near Santa Barbara and then south to the Mission at San Juan Capistrano, he was headed for San Diego.

THE women and children at the southern tip of the present state were rushed inland to safety at the branch mission in Pala. Then the military at the Presidio, under Santiago Arguello, set about to defend their settlement.

But that was once when the demon rum saved a city!

For Bouchard and his men, breaching many a cask after their bloody victory, spent a day and night of celebration. Brandy and wine flowed down their throats; flowed into other casks and were loaded aboard their vessel, lying out to sea.

In convivial spirits, Capt. Hipolite Bouchard heard of the men marching toward him. He set sail at once, came south to the bay of San Diego but, from a safe distance, thumbed his nose at the harbor and the fort and sailed away.

Even in those days, the tale of Captain Cermeno's burial of treasure had gone the rounds and many of the settlers in San Diego, who themselves had fruitlessly searched for the gold and gems, swore the pirate had come to claim that gold for himself.

Be that as it may, San Diego was the only city on the coast line of California which escaped the raider.

The pirates left one token—a human token—in California. That was a Massachusetts lad of 18 years, Joseph Chapman, whom the natives called Jose el Ingles, mistaking him for an Englishman. Deserting a whaler in Honolulu, this Yank had enlisted with Bouchard and was captured by the Californians at Refugio. Sentenced to die, he was saved by the plea of the young daughter of Francisco Ortega, whose rancho the invaders had raided, and was paroled to the Lugo family of Los Angeles as a bonded laborer.

CHAPMAN became popular; was an expert mechanic, an ability which the natives sadly lacked, and in time was freed from his bondage. He became a Catholic, was naturalized, and, to make his tale complete, married the girl who had originally saved his life in her plea to her father.

Joe Chapman was the first American to reside in Southern California. Today the descendants of that Yankee "pirate" and the daughter of a Spanish soldier who was destined to discover the true Bay of San Francisco, are scattered throughout the state.

These, then, are the early Spanish days of San Diego and the southland — days which the Exposition of 1936, with its Spanish buildings, its Spanish atmosphere, its Troubadours, its Spanish Gardens so proudly honors.

Parade of Long-Forgotten Faces

Old Timers, Long Absent, Will Return To Screen

By Linda Lane

ACROSS the ages marches the parade of forgotten faces! Old favorites of millions of the melodrama days, once more will shine and speak in the Paramount "Hollywood Boulevard" production.

Every now and then, in the course of making motion pictures, executives develop a "natural" — which simply means that from a bright idea evolves a production which "has everything."

The idea was to take the audiences who would see the picture, no matter where they live, on a more exhaustive and expansive tour, for the price of admission to the theater, than they would receive if they actually came to Hollywood.

This development led to the use of such backdrops as Santa Barbara and Malibu Beach, playgrounds of the stars, and very exclusive interiors and exteriors of the Hollywood Knickerbocker, Hollywood Roosevelt and Beverly Wil-

One of the Once Familiar Faces That Will Return to the Screen in "Hollywood Boulevard" Is That of Herbert Rawlinson, Who Played in the Early-Day Serials and Who Later Became a Featured Player.

shire hotels; The Trocadero, the Brown Derby, Sardi's and the Vendome, restaurants; the sound stages of Paramount studios; the Club Casanova and the Cafe Mamaze, night clubs, and the homes, boulevards and parks known to millions which are located in Hollywood and Beverly Hills.

Someone suggested that inasmuch as this story was about motion picture players, that those who had virtually grown up on Hollywood Boulevard should be in the production — those who had known triumph, sorrow, happiness and despair along the wide street whose name is magic.

SCOOTS began gathering the thirty who would play outstanding character roles while John Halliday was playing the star who was slipping, Robert Cummings, the brilliant young writer; Marsha Hunt, playing the daughter of the star; C. Henry Gordon and Frieda Inescort were learning their parts.

The stars were found. Herbert Rawlinson, once a serial star, was still in pictures, working in character roles. Betty Compson, for twelve years a star in both silent and talking pictures, was located at Hermosa Beach with her present husband, Irving Weinberg. Maurice Costello was living in an apartment in Beverly Hills. The news that he was wanted for a role came as a complete surprise.

"What is this?" he asked the casting executive who called. "Is somebody ribbing me? I haven't worked in a picture for nine years."

"Nobody's ribbing you, Mr. Costello," was the reply. "This is Paramount calling. We'd heard you'd retired, but we wonder if you would mind doing a small part."

Costello gasped. "I haven't retired," he said. "I don't know where you got that idea. It's true I haven't worked for nine years — but if you've got something for me to do, I'm on the job."

Later, while playing the role of a director in the production, Costello, once the idol of millions of women, calm and self-assured in the silent days, "broke" completely. He couldn't say his lines. The thrill, the emotion of his return to the screen had gotten under his skin.

"I'll be all right in a minute," he told director Florey, and he was.

ESTHER RALSTON, once a Paramount star, now playing leading roles, was glad to appear in the production. She found herself cast as a former sweetheart of Halliday, the falling star, and as an actress.

"Softest job I ever had," she said later. "I was just myself."

Bryant Washburn, whose dimpled chin and curly hair once sent the matinee crowds into ecstasies, wasn't hard to find, either. Since talking pictures, he's been working steadily in substantial parts. It was a big moment for him when he greeted Francis X. Bushman on the set, talked over old times at the Essanay studio in Chicago, where both worked prior to 1918.

"What're you doing?" he asked Bushman. "I'm a director," Bushman replied. "Meet my assistant."

The assistant director turned out to be a youngish looking fellow known on the screen for his "Country Boy Who Made Good" roles more than a decade ago. Have you guessed? It was Charles Ray, since returning to Hollywood, wood, has been writing novels and short stories and coaching young screen prospects in addition to acting in character roles.

Bushman, after his last important silent picture, "Ben Hur," an epic in which he appeared with Ramon Novarro for Paramount, has been in vaudeville, on the stage, and in radio plays. He has also entered the business world, raising Great Danes and attempting to gain a foothold in other fields.

MAE MARSH, working infrequently these days, was found in Pasadena, raising oranges and three children and doing very well, thank you. She accepted her part with pleasure — that of the first wife of Halliday, and mother of Marsha Hunt. Ethel Clayton was found living in the beautiful home just off Hollywood Boulevard which she had built during her starring days. She lives there with her mother.

"When I went into pictures, stage players were ashamed to be seen in them, but when I, a stage player, making seventy-five dollars a week, was offered twice that much I forgot all about being ashamed."

For this money she made stunt pictures and she remembers making 15 stunt pictures in a summer in Maine, when, as she recalls, she spent most of her time diving into and pulling herself out of a very cold ocean. Harry Meyers, also working in "Hollywood Boulevard," was her leading man.

"I blush when I remember that that was twenty-one years ago," she said, in greeting Meyers.

Roy D'Arcy was the sheik in "Hollywood Boulevard." He cherished glowing memories of his villain's role in "The Merry Widow," with the late John Gilbert. Millions remember his work in this and the "Graustark" pictures.

Ruth Clifford, still under 30, resented being called an "old timer," although she has fifteen years of experience behind her.

"I started in pictures when I was 14," she said. "I'm old in experience, but not in years."

And appearances proved her contention. She, too, has worked steadily in less important roles than she once had.

SHE found herself surrounded by such old timers as Bert Roach, always a comic; Jack Mower, Jay Belasco, Edmund Burns, Freeman Wood and Charles Morton. Creighton Hale, still looking young — he played the role of the assistant to Craig Kennedy, the fiction detective immortalized by Arthur B. Reeve — was on the job. Tom Kennedy, the former fighter who turned film "bruiser" was a waiter. Frank Mayo and Mabel Forrest, who sent hearts to palpitating two decades ago, were in strong roles.

"And here I am," said Jack Mulhall. "I'm still living in Hollywood, still working in pictures after twenty-six years. The newspapers have listed me in ten comebacks, but I've never been guilty. I've never quit."

Which proved to be gospel truth. Mulhall has worked consistently all these years. No year has passed without his name appearing in more than half a dozen casts.

Jane Novak, sister of Eva, recalled the days when she was leading woman for Hobart Bosworth and William S. Hart. Bosworth still plays character parts, but Hart has retired long since to a ranch on a hilltop near Newhall, Calif. Her last appearance was in "Redskin," half-talking, half-silent production of 1929, in which Richard Dix was starred.

"I'm glad I'm back," she said. "I retired because of marriage, and because I thought I'd made enough money to live on for the rest of my days. Years passed, and I found that I'd guessed wrong on both counts."

And so, with these people who had been toasted the world over for their talents, the picture went on to a smooth conclusion — one of those few "naturals" of the film industry.

"Growing Up With Hollywood"

By Robert Z. Leonard

Noted Director of "The Great Ziegfeld" and Other Famous Film Productions

Chapter 10.

LON CHANEY, though admirably equipped by long stage training, was doubtful because he had created an eerie, grotesque type of character to which he thought he could not adapt his voice. While still trying to make up his mind, he was stricken with his last illness.

Greta Garbo feared that the low pitch of her voice made her unsuited to the talking screen. It was some time before the studio succeeded in finding something which would make her accent an asset. Finally it came with "Anna Christie," giving her the natural part of a Swedish girl. That talking picture was not only a great triumph for her, but the beginning of an enduring one for Marie Dressler.

Bringing all her old determination to the new demand upon it, Joan Crawford also came through her initial speaking part with flying colors, eventually sharing the glory of "Grand Hotel" with Garbo, John and Lionel Barrymore, Jean Harlow and Wallace Beery.

Gradual development of sound worked many curious changes. Even clothes were affected, such stiff materials as heavy brocades and particularly satins being discarded for fabrics which would not rustle or rattle. No longer was there music on the set to inspire emotional moods in actors, an appalling omission. For another thing, film was improved to so sensitive a degree that the slightest facial blemish became perceptible, consequently a different combination of cosmetics had to be found and used as make-up.

Social life was likewise modified. With the coming of sound and the necessity for actors staying up late at night to study their lines in readiness for next day's work, parties were fewer, till at present practically all are given on Saturday nights.

Hollywood had a big job on its hands. Now that job was to grow still bigger.

IN GIVING tongue to the new and fuller life which sound had opened to it, Hollywood now was like nothing so much as a bright child learning a language it eventually was to master.

Though still in its A. B. C.'s, it made instant and notable progress. This was marked by another big jump in salaries of stage actors definitely come into their own, the creation of new stars such as Robert Montgomery, the winning of Helen Hayes to the screen in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" and later in James M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows," the drawing of famous dramatic authors from all parts of the world, the acquirement of plays reflecting the glory of the theater, and the transformation of huge productions that mustered new recruits to the vast army of picture goers.

But the old did not slip into the new with all the ease of a foot into a familiar shoe.

Difficulties were constantly being encountered, particularly in outdoor scenes. One was due to airplanes, which would come roaring over dismayed units with dire consequences to everything microphonic. To warn them off, we stationed a captive balloon on guard over its back lot, only to have that sentinel of the air punctured into uselessness by sportive pilots. Happily, time perfected a microphone so sensitive as to exclude, to a great degree, all extraneous noises and focus itself on the voices of the actors. Even so, a confirmed industrialist chopping wood in his yard across the street caused much tearing of hair and rending of polite speech. When begged to rest his resounding ax, he merely remarked that a man's home was his castle, or profane words to that effect, and took a fresh swing at the stove-wood. Thereupon M-G-M offered vainly to buy his place. Quiet finally was purchased by placing him on the studio's pay roll at $5 a day.

Tragedy Hovers Over Trail of Emerald Buddha

Yellow Men Cast Sinister Shadow Over Sacred Relic

By Whit Wellman

(SYNOPSIS)

THE Captain of the "Mary Ann" tells the tale of how his mate, Bill Corkey, met a dancing girl in a little Ternate hotel. She called herself a descendant of the ancient Khmer emperor, builder of Angkor Wat in Cambodia. In fear of her life because she knew of a fabulous carved emerald Buddha, sought by the Chinese pirate, Sin Kew, she gives Bill a map of a sealed chamber — where is sealed the skeleton of her ancestor and the immensely valuable idol. Bill and the Captain are attacked by Sin Kew's men, and make for their ship. On their way down Ternate's main avenue, they overcome four natives disguised as police. Once aboard the vessel, they sail for Saigon on their way to Angkor ruins — where Bill has promised to search for the emerald god.

A bottle in their cabin contains a drug, and the steward steals the parchment map of Angkor. Later it is recovered, after they find one of the crew murdered. A few miles from land a member of the crew climbs up the mast and flings a knife at the Captain. The mate shoots him. Chang, a Chinese in charge of the coolies, is warned; all seems peaceful for a moment, but Bill Corkey believes they have had their share of good luck, and are due for more serious trouble. The story continues:

SAILIN' in an' out of queer foreign ports, I'd found that soon or late a man gets back about what he gives out — something like the Hindu idea of reincarnation, only it comes while you're right here trampin' the earth an' running before a stiff wind. Haven't studied about such things; maybe experiences teaches more than books, anyway. And I don't mean exactly that if you hurt a man or let him down, the precise same thing will happen to you next day. Probably it won't, not just like that! But it'll catch up to you, when maybe you've forgotten. Aye, the past can creep up an' strangle you. So — 'cause I'd learned that lesson, an' because Bill was a friend, we put on more sail an' headed straight for Saigon.

You sort of stop an' shiver when you look back — wonderin' how you went through what you did, thinkin' nothing of it. Tough things, the kind you couldn't imagine 'till they happened. When a man's young, adventure stirs his blood — in the jungle or on the sea. He gets old, an' yams about life — goes back to tell how wonderful he was, how strong an' right an' brave. Aye, you can forget you were scared an' uncertain. The years roll out behind you like a carpet, bright an' fine, everything you did is part of the pattern. For awhile you feel young again.

Things on the Mary Ann looked to be quietin' down. Looked so, anyway. Chang goin' about his business, an' the crew not stickin' a knife into anyone. Chang's cousins seemed sort of glum, like the revolution they'd planned wasn't coming off as scheduled.

Bill found a bottle which hadn't been doctored, an' at nights we sat in the cabin without a lamp. Didn't want to make too much of a target for one of the lads who'd a notion to start trouble. We took turns sleepin' while the other stood watch, sittin' at the cabin table keepin' an eye on the deck below. Bill had folded the parchment map an' stuck it in a belt next to his skin.

"If I live through this," he grinned, "I'll buy you a present in Paris or London. If I don't you'll know where to find the map."

"Should you not, I don't go to Angkor," I told him.

"You'd better," he said. "It's going to be worth it."

"I didn't meet the dancing girl, Bill — an' I don't imagine going into the jungle alone for an idol."

"Princess, my lad. She dances, sure; but her ancestors were aristocrats." You couldn't argue with a man about a girl, so I tried to remember that his Ternate entertainer was royalty.

UP through the Muluccas we dodged, sailin' sweet before a clipping wind. Past the treacherous reef of Sangi island into the Sulu sea, where the sky began to twist into queer shapes fortellin' storms. We ran before what might be comin' under full sail, left Sandakan to the south where the curved tip of Borneo jutted into the surf. The deck got washed a bit before we struck into the South China Sea an' set a course for Saigon.

One early hot morning Chang sings out.

"Hi-yi!" he cries, "Hi-yi!" Thinkin' one more of the crew's been done in, Bill Corkey — who had ears like a cat — pulls himself from the bunk, climbs into his pants and jacket. I was half asleep at the table, an' hardly heard Chang's yell.

"Wake up!" says Bill, disgusted with me.

We put our heads out of the cabin door. Most of the crew is spread out on the deck, not dead, just asleep an' peaceful, which was a surprise. Chang is at the wheel where he belongs, chattering like a gibbon an' pointing with a long grimy finger.

Blue mountains lay ahead, the fringe of jungle that reaches down, guardin' the mouth of the Mekong river delta.

"Land —" Chang explains, cheerful about it.

"Yeah, land," Bill sighs with relief. "We're here. We'll go in to the right of that big palm, an' drift up to Saigon. Don't need a pilot, an' don't want one." He was thinkin' how the town's pilot could be a Sin Kew man an' put us in the mud bank. The course that river took ran past a maze of islands, turning back on itself more often than not. Beyond the swaying wall of palms was Saigon.

Bill Corkey knew that river, having been up it the past year. So he takes the wheel from Chang. The wind had shifted, blew up now from behind the jungle, hot an' sticky — making you feel if you went any further you'd burn up. We went up that stream slowly, careful of every turn an' mud bank, wanting to complete the first leg of the trip without more accidents.

BILL brings the ship in to the rotting little wharf without mishap, an' Chang drops anchor. There's a long row of rusted corrugated iron sheds with waves of heat bouncing off their tops, a crowd of rickshaw coolies takin' their ease in the violet shadows of the customs house, and a sweating French colonial in white linen an' worn cork helmet who comes out to inspect us.

"Always did like China," says Bill, wipin' his face with an arm. "You can tell it if you land at night."

He was right, there was a peculiar smell comin' from the town or jungle. Like the mingled odor of heavy spices and human bodies and maybe a whiff of cooking somewhere near. It wasn't China, properly, but Indo-China; not that names made a difference, 'cause the Chinese, like yellow ants, flung out armies of merchants wherever trade ships landed.

We declared our cargo: pepper and kegs of rum, our excuse for bein' where we were. Wasn't a market for pepper, but the rum was as good as sold before we docked.

The white-topped Frenchman strolled down to greet us, the first white sailors he'd seen in days. He bowed, stiffly, like he was tired, and brought his short figure up straight when he learned what we had.

"Rhum? Welcome to our city!" We heard they had other liquors at the Hotel Continent, but no fine rum. We learned that we were expected, which was queer enough to make Bill Corkey scowl and hold his tongue.

"But, yes — a fast China junk came yesterday, saying two white men would arrive to buy elephants!"

"Elephants!" I exclaimed, and Bill kicked me hard. I caught myself. "But certainly, that is our errand! Who sells the beasts?"

THE Frenchman, who turned out to be M. Callaux, trader, supervisor of customs, with a finger in every commercial venture in Saigon, looked at us oddly. His lips parted.

"Who but I, who buy the best elephants in Siam?"

Bill Corkey nodded. We put out our hands, and shook M. Callaux's moist fingers.

"Of course," says Bill, "you're the man we want, and glad to meet you."

M. Callaux hailed a rickshaw. "You will join me on the hotel terrace? First you wish to wash, naturally. I shall go with you, and await your pleasure."

We didn't want to offend the man, but we couldn't afford to waste time. There was a man we had to see.

It was plain that Sin Kew had sent word — maybe come himself, circling the Mary Ann in the Sulu Sea — that we wanted elephants. There was a fat profit in the animals. Sin Kew knew that M. Callaux would hold us up — long enough, anyway, for his pirate gang to locate us. Sin Kew wasn't missing anything. He'd counted on getting the parchment diagram of Angkor through our steward — possibly on tossing us overboard for convenience. Yet he knew that might fail, and he'd prepared M. Callaux to entertain us.

Elephants! The last thing we wanted was to parade through the jungle, announcing our destination to all who watched. I'd heard that bonzes, Buddhist priests, lived in the ruined temples we'd pass on our way north. What would white men riding elephants be doing in their country? Direct methods had failed, and shrewd Sin Kew was trying indirection. I saw what he wanted: delay, delay, until he secured the key to the sealed chamber at Angkor where Bill Corkey's fabulous treasure sat on a skeleton's knee.

M. Callaux waited. What French trader will let you out of his sight if you've money to spend, or rum to trade for elephants? Rumor had preceded us, and our self-appointed host stood in the hazy heat waves, barely hiding his impatience. He shivered in the broiling sun; he didn't look well.

TERRACE sounds good to me," said Bill, looking thirsty.

"M. Callaux will excuse us 'till tonight," I muttered. "We have no decent clothes, and must buy outfits here. You comprehend? We would not disgrace you —" I tried to looked disappointed.

M. Callaux shrugged. "As you will, my friends. It shall be this evening, then. Cooler, I hope." He gazed at the heavy opal sky and shook his head. "No, the heat will remain, and heat is bad for my malaria."

He bowed, not so stiffly this time. We both bent forward, Bill and I, like we were used to being polite. The rickshaw coolie leaned against a shaft, scratching his leg. We climbed in, waving to the Frenchman.

"Leka! Quickly!" I cried. "Boulevard Chaner!" That was the main street, toward the hotel. I wanted M. Callaux to see us starting in the right direction.

"Wish you'd let us have that drink," Bill protested. "Where are we going?"

"We have other things to do than talk about elephants we can't buy. Do you remember Hui Doon?" He was an old Chinese money-lender I'd once done a small favor, and we needed him now. Doon was the only friend I had in that part of the world, if he was still alive.

"That old duck?" Bill asked. "The grateful lad you cut down when he was hangin' by his pigtail from a tree?"

"The same!" I shouted at the rickshaw boy, "Hui Doon, leka!" The yellow lad turned his head, grinned, and swung up a narrow alley. Every coolie knew a money-lender's quarters.

A DUST cloud followed. We scattered doll-like Annamite women and naked children before us. A group of Cambodian girls, marching on padding bare feet like quiet nuns, black umbrellas over close-cropped heads, looked up and smiled. Chinese women — in white jackets and black silk pajamas. The street was full of little women and blank-faced Siamese soldiers in lampshade hats.

I remembered Hui Doon, and hoped he remembered me. A few years back, down in South Borneo, the old Chinese had made enemies of the Malays who owed him money. When a plague broke out and killed some of 'em, they blamed Doon. One night they hung him by his braided pig tail to a durian tree and left him on the jungle's edge. He screamed a while, then got hoarse and lost his voice. Tigers were out that night, and the old man didn't cherish his position. By chance, I happened along on the way to the dock. One thing I did like almost better than savin' his skin — I didn't cut his cue to get him loose. I untied it. It's bad joss to cut an Oriental's pigtail. I saved his dignity.

We rolled around a corner, then another. The coolie jerked to a stop. We'd drawn up before a neat bamboo shack. A pretty Chinese girl stood beside the low entrance, smoking a long cigarette. The inside looked dark and cool, but I knew it was only dark. "Out," I told Bill, who moved reluctantly. He paid the coolie, and the rickshaw disappeared.

SMILED at the girl. "Hui Doon inside?"

She looked at Bill Corkey, and nodded slightly, dropping her eyes. She was young and shy, and Bill impressed them all. He was ragged, like I was — tired and salty appearin' from the long trip, but his figure an' twinklin' eyes were all they saw.

We pushed in, found ourselves in a small front room. We couldn't see much. Then a high-pitched voice spoke in the soft darkness.

"Capt'n, you sit down. Flend sit, too."

"That you, Hui Doon?" Then I saw him, a frail bag of silk-covered bones squatting in the corner, a long opium pipe at his lips. Our eyes grew accustomed to the room, and the Chinese became slowly visible. His friendly eyes blinked at us; a tight skull cap sat rakishly back on his bald head.

"You 'scuse me just sit, Capt'n," he murmured. "Ancient body not good this time."

"You remember me," I said pleased. "It's been a long time, Hui Doon."

"Like elephant, I no forget. I think some day you come."

The old man raised himself on his hands an inch or so, and somehow brought himself erect. One knee bent under him, and he supported himself against the wall. A dim shaft of light flicked his face, yellow and tightly drawn. A flat nose, long and homely. He put out a bony hand. "You welcome," he squeaked.

Bill stared, as if the money-lender was too old to be alive. Hui Doon did seem to be living on borrowed time, shriveled and preparing to join his ancestors in their painted tea-cup heaven.

BEHIND us the girl had come in silently, to see if the old man was able to handle his visitors. An imperceptible scent of wild orchids drifted in with her. "My gien daughter," Hui Doon intoned. "She bling nice wine." His voice rose, "Eh! Go get fo' my flends."

Bill and I squatted on the matting. He offered his opium pipe, but Bill sniffed at it.

"You have hono'ble health, Capt'n?"

"Well enough, thanks. we came to see how you did, Hui Doon. Health and business prosper with you in this city?"

His eyes moved from Bill to me, amused at what he saw, or at some inner thought.

SALT FOR CANCER

COMMON table salt may possibly become an aid in the treatment of cancer if experiments performed by Dr. Ernest O. Lawrence, of the University of California, prove of value in practical therapeutic use.

Dr. Lawrence's experiments center around the production of radium-like emanations from salt, by bombarding it with one and three-quarter million volt rays of deuterons, by means of the "atom gun."

Culottes For Summer Camp Wear Take Country By Storm—Stylist

By Collette

HOW long since you visited a summer camp?

I confess my ideas about camp life were a bit antiquated. For in the absence of any particular thought about the subject, I still carried a picture in my mind of what we called a camp "when mother was a girl."

The up-to-date camp of 1936, I learned quite pleasantly, has all the fitting and conveniences of "a steam-heated flat," with counselors and unit leaders and supervised recreation.

And I got some grand new ideas about girl's frocks, too. Let me tell you, these youngsters, know things. Many of them have a keenly developed clothes sense.

With this visit fresh in mind, I am presenting this week a selection of junior frocks for tots and 'teens, frocks of the type worn by the youngsters I saw, frocks which you or your growing daughter can fashion quickly and inexpensively to amplify a junior wardrobe without breaking your bank.

No. 1875-B

CULOTTES have taken the country by storm and juniors are storming the country in culottes. Better hop on the bandwagon now in self defense. You'll see few to match this fetching model.

Not since Eugenie hats has anything gone to town like culottes. Gone to town? Yes, figuratively and literally, and it's a good bet the style will linger for summers to come, such is the utility and all-round convenience of the type here pictured, with shirtwaist simplicity and summer comfort. Make this model yourself with the ready assistance of Five Star Pattern No. 1875-B, designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 5 yards of 39-inch fabric — seersucker, linen, broadcloth, or gingham. You can make shorts, too, from the same pattern.

No. 1858-B

THE button-down-front vogue is continuing in high favor, and with due justice. This tempting frock for 'teens will give faithful service for months to come.

How to be smart without being fussy might be the proper introduction to this flattering frock for the ten to sixteens. Free around the neck, yet boasting a make-believe collar in the form of pointed revers, this number will slide through your machine in a jiffy, with no tricks to trip you. Just eight pieces and a minimum yardage to fashion this smartly simple frock for outdoors or school wear. Five Star Pattern No. 1858-B is available in sizes 10, 12, 14 and 16 years. Size 12 requires just 2½ yards of 39-inch material. A detailed step-by-step instruction chart is supplied with each pattern.

No. 1817-B

ACTION pleats distinguish this smartly sophisticated frock for juniors. A million dollars' worth of style wrapped in this inexpensive Five Star Pattern. Yours for a pittance and a few pennies' worth of fabric.

Weep no more, little lady. This fabulous frock is yours for a tiny bit of effort and a surprisingly few pennies out of your dime bank! It will practically jump into the stitches and fill your wardrobe — a versatile model to guard your reputation for smart attire and answer your calls for months to come. Note the youthful styling of the skirt, the cut of the collar, and the freedom provided by the action pleats. Truly an answer to a maiden's petition, Five Star Pattern No. 1817-B is designed for sizes 11, 13, 15, 17 and 19. Choose linen, broadcloth, pique, gingham, flannel or any of the featherweight wools.

No. 1827-B

A YOKE or not a yoke. If that's the question, here's the answer. For this versatile frock for the four to tens can be made with or without the yoke.

Double value for busy mothers lurks in this Five Star Pattern, so designed that it may be made into an appealing play or school frock for the junior miss in your family, with or without the yoke which may be observed in the small view. Many mothers, in fact, will make it twice, once with the yoke and once without, and daughter will have two frocks at little more than the cost for one. Styled for all-occasion wear. Five Star Pattern is available in sizes 4, 6, 8, and 10 years. Size 6 requires 3 yards of 35-inch fabric. Percale, poplin, serge, linen, gingham or wool crepe.

No. 1812-B

WANT something to sew up quickly for the little lady of the family? Then pick this adorable frock. Even a novice could complete it in a very short time, with little expense or effort.

The dress is designed with a combination underwaist and pantie, so daughter can don it for the beach and use it for a sun suit. It's almost a replica of big sister's dress — marching buttons down the front — perky puff sleeves and a sweet collar in contrast. There's plenty of room for action in the double pleats, front and back. It is equally smart in dotted swiss, tiny printed lawn, voile or linen.

Five Star Pattern No. 1812-B is available for sizes 2, 3, 4, and 5. Size 3 requires 3½ yards of 39-inch material plus ¼ yard contrast.

Every Five Star Pattern includes an illustrated instruction guide, which is easy to understand.

Should Children Address Parents By First Names?

By Deborah Ames

MY young son came home from an afternoon in the park with his nurse, and greeted me with open arms and a remark that sounded like this, "Hyah, Tootsie!"

The lad is not quite four years old, and, needless to say, I was rather surprised. I managed to keep my face straight, however, and returned his very affectionate greeting. I thought it wiser to ignore the remark, since I have noticed that very young children soon outgrow new words and phrases if nothing is said that makes them feel that they are being cute or smart.

Later on in the same afternoon a friend of mine arrived with her young daughter, aged about 12 or 13. The girl was a rather sweet little thing and I took an instant liking to her — until she started talking!

In the first place, she called her mother Sally. Now, I have no objection to children calling their parents by their first name, after they have reached the age where the parents become more of friends and less of family. I have called my father and mother by their first names since I was about 19 or 20 — but I never did before that.

I THINK most men and women should be proud to be called mother and father, and not try to hide the fact that their children respect them. It may be young and modern to be called Sally by your thirteen-year-old daughter, but I know I'd hate to hear my children call me "Debbie"! After they have both grown up and come to the stage where their feeling toward me has grown into one of affectionate respect, then they can call me whatever the rest of my friends call me.

Another thing that distressed me was the girl's voice. It was harsh and strident, and when she wanted something, she whined. That is something that always annoyed me — whining children. It is so unnecessary for children to grow up with ugly voices not only unnecessary, but cruel. Once a voice slips into the habit of whining, it is hard to get it out, but if it is trained, then it becomes a thing of beauty — and what is more, a very great asset.

I seem to have branched into a discourse on the art of bringing up children, rather than one on etiquette. Let's see, what have I noticed lately? Oh, yes, dancing!

Last week I was a dinner guest at one of the large hotels in San Francisco, and there was a very noisy dinner party going on at the next table. The youngsters, for none of them were more than nineteen, were having a very good time, and they added a lot to the gaiety of the scene. But they did look so sloppy when they danced!

The girls sort of draped themselves over the boys, closed their eyes and stretched a vacuous grin on their faces. The boys were much better dancers than the girls, or so they looked. They stood nice and straight, at least.

DON'T know why the modern girls think they look better when they fold up on their dancing partner's shoulder. There is no point in my saying they never did it in my youth, because they did — and I was guilty, too, until I happened to see myself in a mirror one time. My partner and I looked like nothing so much as an inverted V. From then on I have danced as straight as I can make myself without being stiff — and I have had men tell me that it is much easier to dance with a girl when you lead her — not push her around.

BLUE BIRD'S PAPOOSE

YOU say my desert home is bare, and what is there to see?
And that I have a lonely life with none to play with me.

My mama shows me how to weave and to make pots of clay,
Or maybe I help mind the sheep, there's much to do all day.

Sometime we sit in shade to rest, or hide and watch um road,
And look as cars all hurry on with funny paleface load.

Papoose and I have pleasant time, we sit, we think, we walk,
My papoose doll she ride my back, she look but she no talk.

Sometime we wander far from home, but we keep it in sight,
For mama say if go too far, we no get home by night—

And after dark bad spirits hunt, old persons say they do,
But we are both asleep by dark, SO maybe that not true.

The moccasin that holds my doll, my grandpa used to wear,
But he say, "Papoose needum bed, small baby must have care."

So papoose doll goes where I go, no troubles on um mind,
I keep um eyes on things in front, doll watch um trail behind.

Wizardo Reveals Secret Of Baffling Ring Trick

"AMAZING!" That's what your friends will say when they see you perform "The Ring in the Egg Trick," the secret of which, you will learn today.

Here is a trick that will earn you the reputation of a "master of magic." A favorite stunt of professional magicians, "The Ring in the Egg Trick," when properly performed, has fooled even magicians themselves!

It's easy to do, but if you don't know how — just try to figure it out! So get out your secret code cards, Wizardo Club members, and here's how it's done!

EFFECT: Request some lady in your audience to loan you her wedding ring, promising to return it in a few minutes unharmed. Taking the ring, remove a handkerchief from your pocket and wrap it around the ring. Hand the handkerchief to some member of the audience, and say:

"Will you please hold this for me for a few minutes while I perform my next trick." (The person holding the handkerchief can feel the ring through the cloth.) "And will you hold the ring tightly between your fingers so that it can't fall out of the handkerchief."

Turning to your table, pick up an ordinary egg cup and turn it upside down showing it to be empty. Replace the egg cup on the table and pick up an egg and hand it out to be examined. When the egg has been thoroughly examined and returned to you, remark:

"We magicians believe that everything has its proper place and after all the proper place for an egg is in an egg cup, so I will put this egg in its proper place."

Place the egg in the egg cup.

NOW, walk over to the spectator holding the ring wrapped in the handkerchief, and taking hold of one corner, ask him to let the handkerchief drop. As you do this, place your other hand under the handkerchief as though to catch the ring when it falls. As the handkerchief unfolds, your audience will naturally expect the ring to fall into your hand, but to the surprise of everyone the handkerchief is empty!

Shake the handkerchief out and show both sides and your hands to be empty, saying:

"I don't know who's to blame for this, but it looks as though one of us has lost this lady's wedding ring. By the way, have you another wedding ring handy that we can give to her? You haven't! Well, I guess I'll have to work a little magic and see what I can do."

Return to your table and picking up the egg cup, continue:

"Very few people are aware of the fact, but the common hen's egg is the real secret of a magician's power and here's the proof."

Pick up a buttonhook and break the top of the egg open — reach inside the egg with the buttonhook and pull out the missing ring!

Carry the ring over to the owner while it is still on the end of the buttonhook and ask her to identify it. When she does, remove the ring, wipe it off carefully and return it.

APPARATUS: An egg cup, buttonhook, handkerchief, a small piece of VOOJUK and an ordinary raw egg.

SECRET: VAL a WPOUB wedding ring UGGPO XETO FGIDO. TUNO a FOWDOG BIWNOG ERGPO WIDROD IYGO handkerchief just the FEMO of GPEF DERZ BAG the DERZ in GPEF BIWNOG and FOJ EG AB. Place the handkerchief in your coat pocket.

TO THE POLE 1897

THE King of Sweden financed Salomon Andee in an attempt to fly over the North Pole in a balloon. He sent messages back by carrier pigeon. But he and his crew never returned and no word of them was heard until 1930 when their bodies (perfectly preserved) were found in the ice and snow where they had been forced down.

Iced Fruit-Juice Drinks

One of the Most Delightful and Convenient of All Ways to Have the Fruit Your Health Demands These Summer Days, Is To Serve the Family Cool, Sparkling Drinks With Their Meals.

Cold Foods, Sparkling Drinks Make Attractive Table For Warm Weather

By Jenny Reed
Home Economics Editor

NO time is easier than the summer time to make our food attractive to the eye because we have so many fresh fruits and vegetables to draw from. These days we are interested in serving plenty of cold food, cold sparkling drinks, and cool crisp salads. We may garnish our dishes with lettuce, watercress, radish roses, celery curls, olives, deviled eggs, tomatoes, or lemon slices cut into attractive shapes. A nice garnish which is served with broiled lamb chops is sliced rounds of an orange covered with smaller slices of currant jelly. The outer edge of the orange or the rind should be allowed to show. This combination tastes as good as it looks.

Of course, our summer foods should be selected with the thought that they must not be too heat-producing, but they will accomplish their purpose if they have a cool, crisp appearance. "Go easy on heavy foods during the summer months," has always been an interesting slogan and yet care must be taken in not reducing the energy-giving foods too much. People are growmore and more fruit-conscious, knowing that fruits help to prevent acidity and provide the vitamins and minerals that make a food a protective one. Fruit juice has come to be appreciated as a valuable part of the diet, and of the necessity for it there is abundant proof.

One of the most delightful and convenient of all ways to have the fruit your health demands these summer days, is to serve the family cool sparkling drinks with their meals.

GRAPE MINT JULEP
FOR each glassful of beverage allow ½ cupful of grape juice in which has been steeped, for at least half an hour, one or two bruised mint leaves. Strain these out, and add 2½ tablespoons of orange juice, ½ tablespoon of sugar and water to fill up an ordinary sized glass. Serve very cold with a garnish of mint tips.

FRUIT PUNCH
Boil 2 cups sugar and 1 quart of water 20 minutes

Four boiling hot over:
½ cup lemon juice
½ cup orange juice
1 cup strawberry juice
½ cup canned cherry syrup
1 cup chopped pineapple
When ready to serve, strain and add 1 pint of grape juice.

Dilute with ice water and add 1 cup fresh strawberries, quartered and 1 cup of stoned cherries. Can be diluted with carbonated water if preferred.

SAUSAGE IN ASPIC
1 cup assorted sausages, Julienne
½ cup cooked celery
¼ cup chopped stuffed olives
¼ cup cooked green peas

1½ pints tomato aspic liquid
Mayonnaise, lettuce.

Combine sausage with other ingredients and add to aspic. Pour into a quart ring mold. When firm, turn out on salad platter. Fill center of aspic with mayonnaise. Serve on lettuce.

Luncheon suggestion — Consomme, chopped almonds, sausage in aspic, hot cheese puffs, pear meringues, coffee.

HAM AND TONGUE MOUSSE

2 tablespoons gelatin
¼ cup water
½ cup mayonnaise
1 cup finely chopped cooked ham
1 cup finely chopped cooked tongue
¼ cup finely chopped celery
¼ cup cooked green peas
1 cup whipping cream
Sliced tomatoes

Soak gelatin in water. Dissolve over boiling water. Add gelatin to mayonnaise. Fold in cream. Add ham, tongue, celery and green peas. Pour into mold. Cover top of mousse with thinly sliced tomatoes. Chill for several hours.

Luncheon suggestion — Cream of mushroom soup, whole wheat crackers, ham and tongue mousse, French fried potatoes, lime ice, coconut balls, coffee.

There are times when leftovers are a puzzling problem, but not so with meat when the remains of Sunday's roast may be made into a Swiss salad. This is especially nice when served for a luncheon or buffet supper.

SWISS SALAD

2 cups cold roast meat cut in cubes
1 cup French peas
1 cup walnut meats
Salt and pepper
1 cup celery, sliced
French dressing and mayonnaise
½ cup whipped cream
Paprika

Fifteen minutes before serving, marinate the peas, meat and nuts in French dressing and chill. Season. When ready to serve, add whipped cream to mayonnaise and fold into salad. Add celery and pile in a rounded mound on crisp lettuce leaves on a large platter.

You will find simple, yet appetizing ways of preparing delicious meals — meals that will leave you cool and calm and ready to enjoy these long summer evenings with your husband and friends.

Mail your requests to Five Star Food File, Five Star Weekly, 620 Folsom Street, San Francisco, California.

Kitchen Tips

BERRIES and all fruits will keep in perfect condition if spread on a platter and covered with cellophane or waxed paper.

All strong-flavored vegetables and fruits should be wrapped in parchment or waxed paper, as their odor (onions and cantaloupe for instance) will be absorbed by butter and other delicately flavored foods in the ice box.

In making gelatin desserts always use cooked or canned pineapple, as raw pineapple contains an enzyme which prevents gelatin from congealing when it is cold.

To serve on salmon loaf: Make a white sauce using 2 tablespoons each of butter and flour, ½ cup liquid from can of peas, ½ cup undiluted evaporated milk. When thickened add ½ cup chopped pimiento and ½ cup or more of the drained canned peas.

Didja ever add ground nuts to pancake syrup?

California's History Filled With High Romance

Shades Of Bold Adventurers, Intrepid Explorers And Venerable Padres Hover Over Golden State

By OSCAR O. WINTHER, PH.D., M.A.
(Professor of History, Stanford University)

MYSTERY, romance, courageous adventure and true tales of fabulous riches are all a part of the glamorous past of California. Even the name of the "Golden State" has a romantic history. It was the Spanish novelist, Montalvo, who first used the word in a romantic novel written more than four hundred years ago.

"Know ye that at the right hand of the Indies," ran the Spaniard's story, "there is an island named California, very close to Terrestrial Paradise, which was inhabited by black women, without a single man among them, and that they lived in the manner of Amazons."

The brave but credulous Spaniards who sought the Fountain of Eternal Youth, the Seven Cities of Cibola and the Golden Lake of El Dorado, long believed that California was an island and they hoped that back of it was to be found the Strait of Anian through which they could sail directly east to the Atlantic Ocean.

However, it was not until half a century after the second voyage of Columbus that Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo discovered what is now California. Many voyages of exploration up the Pacific coast followed Cabrillo's discovery, and a steady march of Spanish soldiers, priests, farmers, miners, and adventurers, who were eventually to penetrate and build a rich civilization in the new land, continued northward.

It is no longer popular to believe that great men shape the course of human events, but the almost superhuman accomplishment of planting permanent settlements in California is inescapably due to the genius of the indefatigable Gaspar de Portola and the pious Franciscan, Father Junipero Serra. At the instigation of Jose de Galvez, a half-crazed and unscrupulous Spanish official who feared the encroachments of the Russian Bear, these two men led the first band of permanent settlers into this territory in the year 1769.

At San Diego Father Serra founded the first mission of California and while Portola marched on with a small band of able followers in search of Vizcaino's much-prized port of Monterey, this pious Father remained behind to care for the sick.

Other garrisons and missions (also pueblos), were founded in the years that followed this first trying winter, but the struggle to sustain these infant settlements proved as trying as that which had given them birth. Only a handful of Indians were converted to the Faith, and on one occasion at least, a bear hunt was all that saved the determined colonists from starvation. Only through the further colonizing efforts of the intrepid soldier Juan Bautista de Anza and the dogged perseverance of Father Serra was this historic enterprise crowned by ultimate success.

Juan Bautista de Anza, the Intrepid Spanish Soldier, Who Joined With the Franciscan Fathers in an Attempt to Colonize California.

THROUGHOUT the Spanish period (the "romantic age" of California History), life centered around the missions. Father Serra had founded these missions along the coast and at a convenient day's ride apart, and as such formed a series of settlements extending from San Diego to Sonoma. Connecting these missions was El Camino Real (the King's Highway); though at this time a mere bridle path, it served as a means of communication between the scattered settlements of Alta California.

California grew slowly at first. But with the opening of the new century many things conspired to change her fate. A revolution occurred and California exchanged the flag of the Spanish Bourbons for that of the Republic of Mexico; foreigners drifted in and chief among them were the energetic and irrepressible Yankees; again there was a revolt, this time led by Americans who hoisted the Stars and Stripes when war between the United States and Mexico ensued.

A still greater event was to happen. When Sam Brannan, a San Franciscan, ran through the streets of his little town shouting, "Gold, Gold! Gold from the American River!" (referring, of course, to the famous discovery of James W. Marshall, on January 24, 1848), there began a rush to California the like of which is unparalleled in the annals of history. So great was the influx of people to California that by the close of 1849 the population had increased from an estimated twenty thousand souls on the eve of discovery to well over one hundred thousand. The discovery of gold and American occupation at once infused new life into the veins of this slow-moving Spanish society on the slopes of the Pacific Ocean. Just how fast this development would have been without the discovery of gold no one can tell. That event, as none other, transformed with lightning speed, a simple, pastoral society into a flourishing and powerful state.

Thus the "fairybook" history of early California records as colorful and romantic an era as any in the world's archives.

Throughout the Entire Spanish Period, California's Social Life Centered Almost Entirely Around the Missions. Above Is Pictured the San Francisco Mission, Established Through the Efforts of Father Junipero Serra and His Faithful Followers.

Wreck Of The "Wild Wave"

(Conclusion)

NEXT went into my house. It looked as natural as could be. Everything just about as I had left it. It is occupied by Mr. Moses Young, who had twin daughters 15 years old, and as pretty as pinks, and if dressed as our young ladies are, they would take the shine from a great many who pass for belles. After walking about for an hour, looking at old resorts, we started for the landing. You ought to have seen our escorts! Not every king has had such lovely ones.

Then in order came followers: Mary Young, one of the twins, with a bottle of coconut oil; her sister, with a bottle of syrup; Mrs. Young, with two hens under her arms; Alphonso Young, with figs; Moses, with a large bunch of bananas; women, with ducks and pumpkins; men with sheep; and so it went, every man, woman and child having something, enough to load the boat. It looked good to me to see my ship lying off there to take me away, and it brought to my mind the many hours and days I spent there, always looking off, hoping to see some ship coming to take me off, but no such good sight did we see.

WE FINALLY left them, after an affecting parting, and the last I saw of them they were waving their hats, or anything they could find to wave, at me. I shall long remember the day spent there. Got a quantity of fruit, of which we still have a great deal. So ended my visit. I gave them gifts, and promised to call again when I passed there.

Early in the morning, having to swing wide from my course because of the winds, I came within sight of Oeno reef. A queer feeling to know the bones of my first ship, the Wild Wave, were rotting there on the rocks. Have you ever passed near the grave of an old and loved friend?

It was a fine voyage. Wish you could have been with us.

Yours,

Josiah N. Knowles.

TO MEN like Captain Knowles the sea is a siren, chanting a litany of adventure. Little sections of his heart were consigned to each ship he commanded during his lifetime at sea.

To begin with, of course, it was his first love, the Wild Wave. Then, after that ill-starred berth, the full-rigged clipper Espondier knew him as her master. She carried him toward the horizon for 13 years. The historic Charger sailed the seas under his command in 1863, the Kentuckian in 1867.

In 1871 the gallant Glory of the Seas proudly responded to his will. It was that aristocrat of off-shore trade that caught most of his affection and replaced, to some measure, his wrecked love, the Wild Wave.

The Glory still holds the record from San Francisco to Sidney, made in 1875 under Captain Knowles. Her time was 35 days, and it was made under unfavorable conditions of wind and weather and without sufficient ballast. Eighteen years ago, in 1917, sea folk talked of the voyage of the full-rigged ship Dunsyre, which went from San Francisco to Wellington, N. Z., in 38 days, commanded by a 23-year-old skipper. The Glory had sailed more than 500 miles further with three days to spare!

The Glory of the Seas is credited with other fast voyages, even, some say, a record breaker from Havre to San Francisco. All these laurels were captured under Captain Knowles. No wonder he loved the stout ship.

It was poetic fate that the last deck he was to cross in life was that of the gallant old veteran, the Glory. In 1893, as an office executive of the Pacific Whaling Company, largest organization of its kind, then operating more than 150 ships, he sailed down San Francisco Bay bound for Alaska on a business trip. Passing through the Golden Gate, he was stricken with a fatal illness. His ship put about and signaled a launch to take him ashore.

The launch carried him through the Oakland estuary and drew up alongside a sailing vessel moored to the wharf. To reach the dock he had to be helped across the ship. As he stumbled painfully across the deck supported by two men he noticed familiar things about the ship. His tired eyes ran forward, along her trim rails. He was on the Glory of the Seas! She had docked the day before, an arrival from Singapore.

TWO weeks later Captain Knowles died at the home of a daughter in Alameda, California. The Glory's end came 30 years later. She was burned deliberately, for the copper in her—melted down for junk.

She had escaped hidden reefs, typhoons, and all the varied malice that had pursued ships in the days of sail. But at last the Glory, sole survivor of all the clippers, was burned for junk. Maybe it was kind that Captain Knowles, a real seaman who loved ships above all else in life, never had to see the flames rising from the pyre of his old ship.

Maybe, too, the Wild Wave, for which a young captain had planned so grand a career, was really a lucky ship. She, at least, surrendered to the sea, her natural adversary, in the glory of action, long before the commercial logic of men branded her a barren hulk.
